Election-Year U.S. 'Pushing' Cuba War

HAVANA (AP)—Cuba now stands in great danger of attack, Prime Minister Fidel Castro told a television audience, because U.S. politicians facing November elections are "trying to push the country toward aggression."

He said in the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate "there is a competition to see who can shout most. . . . It doesn't matter to them that they play with the destiny of the world and play with war."

U.S. Backs Latin Shield

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States has decided to throw strong support behind Latin-American moves for creation of a Caribbean defence organization.

Man Robbed By Thief With Knife

A man was held at knife point by an assailant who tried to rob him then made off with his car at Davin and Maddock last night, police said.

Norman Ferguson, 2588 Wark, managed to keep his wallet by throwing it away as his assailant searched him, but the thief got his car, $3 and a watch.

Search On For Boat

A search was conducted late last night for a 19-foot boat which left Mill Bay for Sidney at 4 p.m. and was overdue in returning to Mill Bay.

Police are withholding the names of the two occupants.

Third Drowns

Two Survive Ordeal at Sea

ABERDEEN, Wash. (AP) — A tale of 18 fear-some hours adrift in a dory in a Pacific storm was told Saturday by two men who saw their companion die during the ordeal.

Capt. E. A. Quinn, 51, a Columbia River pilot, and Don Nelson, 34, a crew member of the pilot ship Peacock, were hurried through surf Friday night onto a beach near Westport.

BODY LOST

They had lashed the body of William Wells, 35, another Peacock sailor, into the dory but it was washed away as the 16-foot boat capsize four times while being driven ashore.

Quinn said Wells died, apparently from exposure, about 10 hours after the storm swept them away from the Peacock at 12:40 a.m.

They were returning to the pilot ship from the Japanese freighter Olympia Maru, which Quinn had piloted over the Columbia River bar.

"We fought the boat and climbed in, but were unable to get back to the pilot ship and started drifting," Quinn said.

"We just had two oars, but if we had had six they wouldn't have helped us."

WIND MOUNTED

Eventually, the wind shifted to the west and they were swept through the surf and onto a beach south of the harbor entrance.

"Eventually we hit land and were darned glad to see it,"

Doctors said they suffered from exposure and were battered and bruised, but otherwise in surprisingly good condition.

Kennedy to Speak To Nation Today

U.S. Mobilizes South Forces

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Kennedy acted with dramatic swiftness late Saturday night to ensure that federal court orders for the University of Mississippi to enroll a Negro be carried out.

In several near-midnight announcements, federal troops were mobilized, the Mississippi National Guard federalized and presidential address to the nation scheduled.

ENFORCE LAW
The Pentagon announced first the army had been ordered to dispatch units to Memphis, Tenn., and have them prepared to enforce federal law in Mississippi if necessary. The White House followed this with an announcement President Kennedy would address the nation on radio and television Sunday at 4:30 p.m. PDT.

HE APPEALS
Newsmen were then summoned to the White House and the president issued a dramatic near-midnight announcement. He said he had talked with Governor Barnett three times Saturday about the governor's refusal to obey the courts and admit Negro James Meredith to the university. Mr. Kennedy said he appealed to Barnett for "law and order to be obeyed."

But the White House said the president failed to get what it called "satisfactory assurances" from the determined governor.

Soviets Must Depart

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States asked the Soviet Union Saturday to send home two members of the Soviet UN delegation alleged to have bought secret American defence documents from a U.S. sailor.

The request was made in a note from the U.S. delegation delivered to the Soviet delegation.

The two whose recall was asked were Evgeny M. Pukhov, 31, a second secretary in the Soviet permanent UN mission, and Ivan Y. Vyrtov, 38, a third secretary.

The FBI said it caught the sailor passing navy instruction manuals to Pukhov. Pukhov was in a car outside a house in Larchmont, N.Y. Vyrtov was in the driver.

U.S. Singer In Red Jail

BERLIN (Reuters) — Gabrielle Hammerstein, a 35-year-old American singer, was sentenced Aug. 2 to six years imprisonment in East Germany on charges of espionage, an American spokesman said yesterday.

News of Miss Hammerstein's sentence reached West Berlin through "private sources," he said.

Miss Hammerstein, of Jackson Heights, N.Y., was tried secretly by an East German court at Neubrandenburg. She had been held incommunicado since she disappeared last January.

U.S. Expert Says Alouette First of Joint Projects

WASHINGTON (UPI) — James Webb, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said yesterday the Canadian-built Alouette satellite was the forerunner of other joint U.S.-Canadian space projects.

"It is," he said, "not only an historic example of international co-operation in space, but only a tribute to the high order of Canadian technology, but is also the forerunner of other cooperative projects of Canada and the United States which will contribute importantly to the world's scientific knowledge."

Webb did not indicate what form U.S.-Canadian space co-operation might take in the future.

He said, however, "the cooperative launching of the first space craft to be completely designed and built by a nation other than the United States or the Soviet Union is a significant demonstration of the benefits which can be obtained when two nations find effective ways to join in the peaceful exploration of space for the good of all mankind."

'Significant Step' —Petrie

"Canada's earth satellite represents a significant step forward in her study of the upper atmosphere," said Dr. R. M. Petrie, head of the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory, yesterday.

Dr. Petrie said of the Alouette this was "a fine achievement of the people concerned to design and instrument such an advanced mechanism."

Dr. Petrie and the satellite's chief significance is that it will supplement, from above the atmosphere, the studies already carried out on it from the ground.

The atmosphere is an atmospheric layer which begins about 30 miles from the earth and extends outwards to about 300 miles.

Canadian Disposal Sites

'Hot' Garbage Safe Off Pacific Coast

WASHINGTON (AP) — Low-level, packaged radioactive wastes may be dumped at 40 locations off the Pacific coast of the United States and Canada without endangering human or sea life, a panel of scientists said Saturday.

The panel used a new rule-of-thumb for determining how much radioactive material might be dangerous. The technique is based on the specific activity of chemical elements in the sea. Eight rectangular disposal sites, each measuring nine nautical miles to a side, would be sufficient to dispose of present waste products, mostly leftovers from the use of radioactive isotopes in medical diagnosis and research laboratories, the report said. Six of these sites would be located from the Mexican border northward to the Columbia River; two would be north of the Columbia.

Of the 40 possible sites, 20 would be south and 20 north of the Columbia. The panel of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences and the U.S. National Research Council, in its report released Saturday, recommended that disposal sites be chosen away from coastal basins, sea mountains, trenches and canyons. Sites should not be used for any other waste disposal, and disposal depth should be greater than 1,200 fathoms—1½ miles.

Below that depth, the panel said, radioactivity cannot get into edible sea life by direct means. Generally, the amount of radioactivity can be dumped increases with the depth of the site.

Radioactive wastes would be contained in drums or other safe packaging materials. In the past such packaged wastes from the western U.S. have been dumped in drums on the ocean floor mostly at two sites off the California coast.

The study supplements one made a few years ago of the Atlantic coast situation. The findings were roughly the same as to depth requirements and so forth. However, because of the extent of the Atlantic coastal shelf of relatively shallow water, the disposal problem in that coast is more complicated, an Academy of Sciences spokesman said.

Nuclear Waste Problem

Watch That Dial!

LONDON (Reuters) — British naval officers and seamen who will serve in nuclear submarines were ordered Friday to get rid of their luminous watches—or have the luminous substance removed—because of radio-activity.

The order, sent to all ships and naval installations, also warned "don't do it yourself—go to a qualified jeweler."

"A do-it-yourself job would produce radioactive particles which would give rise to a serious risk to the health of the person concerned."

The order said luminous watch dials constantly emit a radioactive gas called radon. Quantities of radon are likely to be biologically insignificant but even in small quantities it might affect certain instruments, the order added.

Canadians Ready

Congo Campaign Over by Spring?

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP)—There's a good chance the United Nations operation in the Congo will be wound up by next spring, informed sources said Friday.

This would mean return to Canada of some 300 Canadian soldiers and airmen serving with the UN force. The Canadians handle communications for the forces throughout the Congo and run the air operations.

Main impetus for conclusion of the Congo undertaking, begun in 1960, is imminent bankruptcy. Costs are running at $10,000,000 a month and many UN members, notably the Soviet Union, refuse to assume any part of them.

TEMPORARY TERM

Acting UN Secretary-General U Thant is determined to wind up the Congo operation by the time his temporary term of office expires next April. He doesn't want to preside over a bankrupt organization if he becomes permanent secretary-general.

TALKS UNDER WAY

Negotiations aimed at integration of breakaway Katanga province with the rest of the Congo now are going on. Informants said progress, though slow, is being made. Katanga Premier Thombe has accepted in principle U Thant's plan included, as a last resort, sanctions against Katanga if it continued succession. Canada went along with the general plan but it has many reservations about sanctions.

For one thing, it feels sanctions might force Thombe into seizure of the Katanga copper mines and the UN would end up in an armed clash with the Katangans.

For another thing, the Canadian government is said to feel that, once sanctions were applied to any country, there might be a rash of such actions which would only make a difficult world situation worse.

Collision Off Golden Gate

Ship Limping Away

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—The American super tanker Titan collided with the Colombian motor vessel Rio Magdalena in heavy fog 20 miles south of San Francisco Bay early Saturday.

More than two hours after the first distress signal was received from the 733-foot tanker, its captain reported his radar showed the 338-foot Colombian vessel proceeding slowly toward San Francisco. Later it arrived safely.

SHIP STOPPED

The Titan skipper said his 18,432-ton ship was stopped. His ship had two small holes below the waterline, while the Magdalena had a cut on the port side, 20 feet wide and 20 feet from main deck to below the waterline.

There were no injuries. Nor was it known what cargoes, if any, the vessel carried.

REPORT CHANGED

An earlier report that some of the 2,123-ton Rio Magdalena's crew had taken to the water in lifeboats was changed by the U.S. Coast Guard, which later said the men at one point were in the boats but were not lowered into the water.

Three coast guard cutters were on the scene about four miles off Point Montara. The Titan said the two vessels had hung up on each other for a short period. The tanker reported it was taking on water but was in no danger of sinking.

The Titan, owned by the Overseas Oil Transport Corporation of New York City, was steaming from Mobile, Ala., toward its first visit to San Francisco.

Tough RCN Pilot Blonde's Stylist

PORTSMOUTH, England (AP)—A hard-bitten Royal Canadian Navy pilot told Saturday how he made a dress for a pretty blonde survivor of an American airliner which was ditched in the North Atlantic last Sunday.

The survivor is Mrs. Lois Elander, 31, of West Point, N.Y., and Seattle, Wash., one of four taken aboard the Canadian aircraft carrier Bonaventure.

Mrs. Elander's dress was tailored and Sub-Lt. Bill Vallee, a 24-year-old flyer in the sick bay with a knee fracture, decided some new togs would improve her morale.

So he obtained some woolen curtains ordinarily used in the ship's mess—grey with a brown thread running through the material—and set to work with scissors and sewing machine.

"I started the job at three o'clock in the afternoon and had it finished by nine o'clock the next morning," said Vallee.

Vallee, married for 18 months, said he had studied dressmaking for three years and frequently made clothing for his 22-year-old wife at their home in Dartmouth, N.S.

The outfit he produced for Mrs. Elander consisted of a slim-fitting straight skirt and a bolero jacket. Commodore William H. Landymore, skipper of the Bonaventure, completed it by giving her a silk shirt. Mrs. Elander was delighted.

Law, Order Collapse

HOLLANDIA, New Guinea (AP)—West New Guinea, on the eve of transfer from Dutch to United Nations administration, is facing a partial collapse of public services, communications and law and order.

The few remaining Dutch residents fear it is unlikely the United Nations will be able to do much about it the next few weeks.

DISORDERS

In Hollandia, capital city of this territory which has been ruled by the Dutch for 134 years, reports of disorders are increasing as the Dutch make ready to hand over administration to the UN on Monday. The UN will hand over the territory to Indonesia next May 1. There are reports that headhunting tribes, brought under control only in recent years, have resumed activities.

CLUB BURNED

The exclusive Hollandia Yacht Club burned mysteriously early Saturday leaving its 300 Dutch members with no place to go for recreation.

Earlier last week 15 Papuans staged a knife battle in front of Hollandia's police station leaving one dead and three seriously injured.

WATER UNSAFE

Telegraph connections between Hollandia and several coastal and interior points are suspended and are sporadic with Huk International airport. In Hollandia the water has been declared unsafe for drinking because of lack of filtering chemicals.

India, Chinese Clash Over Border Claim

NEW DELHI (AP)—Indian and Chinese Communist troops fought another skirmish along the Tibetan border Friday night, with casualties reported on both sides.

An Indian spokesman said three Indian soldiers were wounded in the latest flareup of shooting in the northeast border area. Radio Peking said four Chinese border guards were wounded.

Each nation accused the other of invading its territory. Chinese Reds claim 38,000 square miles of India's northeast frontier agency belong to Tibet.

India said the Chinese force crossed the border into the frontier agency Sept. 9 and is still encamped 500 to 700 yards from the Dholu post.

The first shooting broke out near Che-Jao bridge, a mile or two to the east, on Sept. 21. It has continued sporadically, except for a lull from Wednesday morning to Thursday night.

'Wait, See' Favored

BRIGHTON, England (Reuters) — Opposition Labor party executives Saturday backed leader Hugh Gaitskell's "wait and see" policy on British entry into the European Common Market.

A 50,000-word statement on the market issued by the party's executive committee after many hours of tough argument will form the basis of the Labor party's crucial Common Market debate at its annual conference here Wednesday.

While delegates assembling for the conference, which opens Monday, were still studying the document's terms to see whether it foreshadowed any fresh lines of party action, party chairman Harold Wilson summed it up this way: "This document, the first full statement by the Labor party on the subject, makes two things very clear."

Food Prices Will Climb

BRISTOL (Reuters)—Deputy Minister R. A. Butler warned Saturday food in Britain will be more expensive if Britain joins the European Common Market.

"The first is we are repeating that if our very detailed conditions are achieved the Labor party would support entry into Europe. But if they are not we oppose such entry."

"Secondly, since the likely terms which the six market members are offering to Britain have become very much clearer in the past few weeks, we have put beyond doubt our attitude to them. We regard them as totally unacceptable."

"That means that unless Britain's negotiators secure substantially better terms on the lines we have outlined we shall oppose entry."

Dud Ammunition

THE LEADER of the Liberal Party, Mr. Lester Pearson, has given notice that he will attempt to throw the present government out of office Monday by bringing in a non-confidence motion. His objective, of course, can only be attained if he is supported by the 30 Social Credit and 18 New Democratic Party members of Parliament.

In setting such a well-advertised course of action it appears that Mr. Pearson is ready to let his personal and political ambitions overrule his moral obligation to the people of Canada. Certainly it must be as obvious to him as it is to the other partisan leaders in the House of Commons that the Canadian voter is neither willing nor ready to see the country thrown into the political limbo of a general election at the present time.

Premier Bennett, whose proved ability to interpret the general public's reaction to affairs of the moment is one of his traits most envied by his detractors, placed the situation in sound perspective when he said on Thursday: "Any person or any party who upsets the apple-cart at this time is going to lose. This is no time for an election."

These words of Mr. Bennett have such a ring of truth and common sense about them that Mr. Pearson would do well to heed them. He has neither cause to believe the public would welcome the move he proposes, nor hope that either of the two smaller opposition parties will support it.

What makes his position even more precarious is the fact that he has already lost the very points on which he has chosen to challenge the government.

It cannot be forgotten that it was Mr. Pearson who told Canadians some three months ago that their country was facing immediate economic ruin—a disaster that could only be averted if he were elected prime minister. However, he was not elected prime minister and the economic collapse of Canada has not come about.

To the contrary, the country has gained the praise of the Western world for its unprecedented recovery from the 1960-61 recession.

Mr. Pearson surely cannot hope to persuade Canadians now that their country is in the dire straits he and his cohorts so joyously predicted in May and June. The factual figures of Canada's economic position as published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics last week are sufficient evidence in themselves to destroy his gloomy prophecies.

Canada's gross national product to date this year, according to the DBS, has increased by such a rate that it appears likely that the government's April 10 budget forecast of a seven per cent rise in the GNP will "be achieved or perhaps exceeded."

The report also reveals these facts: personal incomes have advanced 3.4 per cent over the first quarter; labor income is up 3.6 per cent; corporate profits have risen three per cent; and net savings for individuals have increased by 55 per cent.

So much for that aspect of the nation's economy—an aspect which Mr. Pearson might care to avoid mentioning on Monday. But what about the grim unemployment picture the Liberal leader painted for Canadians during the election campaign? Here, too, he becomes untruthful.

Less than a month after he had forecast to all that the country would soon be suffering from the highest rate of unemployment since the unhappy days of the great depression, Canada's unemployment figure stood at 4.5 per cent of the labor force—nearly one per cent less than the United States' figure for the same period. And yet, Mr. Pearson constantly holds up the government and the economy of the United States as a model of all that is virtuous and an example of strength which should be emulated by this country.

With the heartening recovery of the economy as a result of recent federal policies, and the satisfying reduction in the numbers of unemployed, Mr. Pearson has lost much of the ammunition he sorely needs to put the government out.

As is widely realized by many Canadians, it was dud ammunition to start with; which is quite understandable as most of it was home-made by the Liberal back-room boys.

Redeeming Feature

IN APPROVING the holding of a referendum in December on amalgamation with Victoria, those members of Saanich council who blocked a study of unification earlier in the year perhaps calculated that, voting on a basis more of emotions than of facts, the people of the municipality would turn it down again as they did in 1958.

Certainly the old-line foursome who choose to ignore the new spirit evidenced in the last elections by the overwhelming support given pro-amalgamationists Reeve Murphy and Councillor Curtis could disprove this assumption by proposing to delay the referendum until the public can see and consider the results of a study being undertaken by a committee of the Chamber of Commerce. But they have shown no sign of doing so. Indeed the council of which they form the majority has shown no interest yet even in helping with the investigation.

Thus it would appear that there is no hope of the ratepayers of Saanich being able to acquire, before casting their ballots on this question with its complex ramifications, the facts and figures that apply in today's circumstances and those that are now predictable for coming years.

Such apparent obligation to ballot on accepting or rejecting a pig in a poke would be entirely deplorable but for one redeeming aspect. The December referendum will not in actuality be a vote to unite with Victoria or not to do so. Unification can only be brought about by bylaws approved by 60 per cent of the owner-electors in both municipalities, and certainly the terms would have to be set out before the decision could be made.

What the Saanich electors will truly vote on in December is whether Saanich and Victoria should get together in study and negotiation so that a clear picture can be presented to them and to Victorians before they are called upon to make their choice. And this should call for an affirmative vote from every taxpayer concerned about the future of the municipality and of his or her own family and property.

Thinking Aloud

... of shoes, and ships,
and sealing wax...

By TOM TAYLOR

IT REALLY is a remarkable world they are coining for the future and were it not that I won't be here to savor it I might feel some qualms of disquiet.

The idea for instance of wrapping oneself in a cellophane suit and taking off for a vacation on the moon doesn't really appeal to me, yet one is promised such a venture in the flights of imagination that accompany each new orbital knight of the air as he takes off into space.

And you know, such visionary suggestions are not to be scoffed at in superior disdain. At least had you been born when I was you'd credit almost anything in these magical mechanical days.

A trip to Venus might loom, semantically anyway, as a bit more attractive, but neither, I fancy, would match the lure of travel posters on buses in tourist bureaus. There aren't any castles, grand operas, cafes royal, historic and scenic delights up there on empty planets unless homo sapiens is in for the biggest shock since first he began to cast an eye on foreign horizons.

No, it's all right for the John Glenns to undertake these spacious jaunts but as a weekend or annual pastime a journey so far into the blue would be frightfully dull.

There is perhaps a certain titillation connected with the automation trend, implying as it does that some day no one will have to work at all, but the boredom this spreads before one is enough to rouse a clamour for a seven-day working week.

The most disconcerting of all the fancy prophecies however comes with the prediction of a Pennsylvania professor that man in future will develop a telepathic brain so powerful he'll be a built-in wireless set, able without even pressing a button to send and receive messages all over the world.

At first this seems like a wonderful idea, akin to the wireless invisible man who, unless he could eavesdrop anywhere as long as he didn't have his clothes on. Perpetual nakedness isn't all milk and honey, however, as he found out. But imagine the thrill of being a Peeping Tom without having to peep!

All the possessor of this powerful brain would have to do is project his telepathic impulse and he'd know what was going on inside the head of anyone else.

What rupture this for the gossip, except that he or she would be equally vulnerable. I presume one couldn't shut the telepathy off.

The professor points out, for instance, that no secrets could exist between men and nations, and there with one eliminating puff would go all those delightful thoughts and the sinister ones too—that one likes to keep to oneself. What a fine how-do-you-do this would evoke at, say, election times. Or in Parliament. Gone would be the need for a non-confidence motion; a government could be stymied in advance merely by mental theft. And how easy for panelists in a quiz program.

But imagine the mental tumult at a pink tea with a lot of new hats on show!

The professor sees good coming out of this all-encompassing human telepathy, nevertheless. Because there could be no secrets, diplomatic, strategic, economic or otherwise, war would be impossible. The psychic status quo would freeze nations into peace, as it were.

I would be inclined to think they'd be frozen in bedlam, with thoughts and counter-thoughts battling to get through the ether. The individual would be one big telepathic beast, unable to seal himself from an avalanche of messages, weight and unwanted.

Talk about Big Brother listening from a hidden microphone!

If that is to be the world of some future date it reconciles me to know I won't be a victim. I like my secrets.

The Pucknuck

Departed Lure

By GREGORY CLARK

AS recently as 10 years ago, the housewife in the big cities could go for a drive no more than five miles and find, at this time of year, wayside markets loaded with vegetables and fruit and produce of every kind. The merchandise was local, as was obvious from its freedom from over-expert packaging in basket or bag. It had a fresh-off-the-field look.

On all the highways and many of the side-roads a little way outside the perimeter of big cities there would be one of these wayside stands every mile or two, and the shopper felt in touch with the good earth.

Yesterday, my wife and I went forth to visit one or two of our favorite stands that had been there for years, not so much to buy anything in particular as to feast our eyes.

They were all gone. New housing developments had sprung up not like mushrooms but like magic forests. Shopping plazas loomed on every horizon. Car salesrooms, bright and shining, stood on the sites that two autumns ago were rough shades full of bounty. When finally we found one, the proprietor remarked he didn't have any daisies left at the moment. He hadn't had time to drive his truck into the city to pick up a supply.

The Liberals will attempt to woo votes not only with the power pitch but also on the social reforms it has introduced.

The hospitalization act, while not yet at peak efficiency, has made many friends and there have been marked improvements on the educational front.

The Union Nationale will try to fight back with the war cry of "financial mismanagement" and hardship for the average Quebecer.

Says its leader Daniel Johnson: "A hungry man who isn't sick is hardly impressed with a financial plan he doesn't need."

But Johnson is significantly unwilling to fight the power source head-on.

The Lesage-Lovegrove thrust has looked him on his own party's history of promising nationalization.

"If we do go into the Common Market it'll be back to slave labor, you mark me words."

A Most Dubious Trend-Setter

By ARTHUR BLAKELY

IN recent decades, the federal Liberals have rejoiced whenever the provincial Liberals were successful in winning a Quebec election. It didn't happen often. But when it did, Liberal MPs and the party's national organizers tended to look upon it as a good omen.

In much the same way, the federal Conservatives have had a vague feeling that their own prospects in Quebec were improved by a Union Nationale victory. And this, of course, despite the fact that their links with the Union Nationale were much more tenuous than those binding the Liberals and their provincial colleagues.

Neither party ever relied too heavily on the result of a Quebec election as an indication of how the voters of that province might vote federally.

Climax Approaches

Fight for Power

By H. W. PATTERSON

A PINT SIZED former radio commentator is the big noise in Quebec politics today. Gravel-voiced Rene Levesque is credited with being the main push behind the decision of the government of Premier Jean Lesage to take over 11 private power producers and to go to the polls to get public backing for the move.

If the provincial Liberal Party scores a solid victory in November—and, at the moment, there is overwhelming evidence that it will—the rapidly rising influence of its left wing, led by Levesque, will be confirmed.

For Levesque it is the climax of a fiery political crusade fueled by fierce personal conviction.

The 40-year-old minister of natural resources remembers his boyhood in the power-poor Gaspé Peninsula. He blames the "incredibly costly mess" of the present power system—45 private companies plus the public-owned Quebec Hydro—for the chronic depression that grips Gaspé and inhibits development of other backward regions.

The grimish arts graduate of Laval University started his campaign of attrition—both within the cabinet and without—about 27 months ago. The road was long and uphill all the way. It wound through an interminable maze of cabinet cross-pressures and into a hinterland hungering for new political direction.

Everywhere Levesque's baritone thundered the gospel that power was the key by which French Canadians could regain their own kingdom.

History had provided them with too many sharp reminders that the two must be considered separately. During most of the many years that the King and St. Laurent Liberals held office nationally, the late Premier Duplessis held Quebec in the palm of his hand provincially.

But with this important reservation, the two national parties found it encouraging, at the very least, if and when their provincial friends, allies or cohorts were able to score a provincial victory.

Now that Premier Lesage has arranged to have a Quebec election on Nov. 14, it remains to be seen how closely the next national election trails in its wake. The federal election could come some two weeks after the result of the Quebec election is known. Or it could be held up until mid-1963.

That the national campaign will be influenced substantially by the Quebec election that has gone before, there is not the slightest doubt.

In keeping with established custom, the national Liberals would point to a victory by Premier Lesage as proof that Liberalism was still on the upswing in Canada and that Liberal Leader Lester Pearson, by sweeping Quebec, would win the national election handsily.

By the same token, Conservative orators, spokesmen and strategists would be quick to point to a Lesage defeat as a Liberal setback of major proportions which would ensure another Tory triumph federally.

They would present such arguments, certainly. But it is doubtful if they themselves could be convinced. Which might make them rather less convincing.

On this occasion, the outcome of the Quebec election will be a more dubious trend-setter, probably, than at any time since Confederation.

The Quebec position is complicated by the curious decision of the Socreds to remain on the sidelines as far as Quebec provincial politics is concerned.

In the June 18 national election, the Socreds showed, and for the first time, surprising strength in Quebec. They wound up taking 25 of the 75 seats.

By August, many Quebec Socreds seemed ready, willing and able to move into provincial politics to apply the same sort of squeeze to the provincial Liberals and the Union Nationale. With the Lesage government losing popularity and the Union Nationale still under a cloud, there weren't many Quebec observers in a hurry to pooh-pooh their optimism. In the light of their astonishing gains in Quebec in the June national election.

But then, suddenly, and for reasons quite as puzzling as those which caused his political lull, Adolf Hitler, to give the order to the German army to halt the advance on Dunkirk. Sacred Co-Leader René Casquette set himself resolutely against any venture into provincial politics for the time being.

Social Credit, he argued, was a federal party. Its policies could only be applied at the national level (Alberta and B.C. please note).

And there was just the slightest hint that the operation might involve expenditures which the party could ill-afford, a provincial organization which didn't exist and a new set of Quebec Socreds leaders who couldn't be found and trained in short order.

At the Trois-Rivières conference, the Quebec Socreds obediently turned thumbs down on the project. They did, it's true, append the qualifying phrase "for the moment" to the decision to keep out of Quebec provincial politics. Nonetheless, they bound themselves not to enter candidates in a provincial election, "for the moment."

If they adhere to this decision, the significance of the Quebec election result will sag to an all-time low, in national terms. A victory of whatever proportions for Mr. Lesage or Mr. Johnson won't mean much in terms of the next federal election with the Socreds remaining resolutely but awkwardly on the sidelines.

Romance of Our Hymns

Fanny Crosby

By KATHLEEN BLANCHARD

IF we knew the inner life of many of the people we work with and do business with and meet socially in ordinary ways, we would be more kind and gentle with them. Grief makes life hard for many people.

There is always comfort for those who go forward—even though they mourn. This was the keynote of the much-loved blind poetess, Fanny Crosby, who received various inspirations for the writing of her hymns.

It was an age of evangelistic singing missions, and Fanny Crosby's hymns were always in request. So popular was the little poetess that she was invited to speak at many places where these missions were held.

On one occasion it was at one of the state prisons—much was hoped for from a particular meeting.

The hospitalization act, while not yet at peak efficiency, has made many friends and there have been marked improvements on the educational front.

The Union Nationale will try to fight back with the war cry of "financial mismanagement" and hardship for the average Quebecer.

Says its leader Daniel Johnson: "A hungry man who isn't sick is hardly impressed with a financial plan he doesn't need."

From Colonial Files

DESPITE the threat of an impending downturn, cheery crowds lined Victoria streets to welcome President and Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt on a brief visit to Victoria, 25 years ago.

... the president, whose warm smile, attractive personality and utter geniality makes him friends wherever he goes, was quick to sense the cordiality of the welcome. His refusal to leave Victoria, and the fact that it was an hour and a half after the scheduled time that he again boarded the U.S.S. Phelps ... was declared to be one of the finest compliments he could have paid this city and the people of this province.

In Edmonton, the Alberta Social Credit government introduced a bill to "insure publication of accurate news and information" in the newspapers, which would give the chairman of a special board authority to enforce publication of any statement furnished by him affecting the objects of any government policies and would require editors and publishers to disclose every source of information contained in any statement in their newspapers.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught paid a vice-regal visit to Victoria and were welcomed with warm enthusiasm, 50 years ago.

The city's welcome to Canada's first royal governor-general was described as worthy of Victoria's reputation. "The weather was perfect; it could not have been improved upon if it had been made to order: the program was carried out without a hitch."

The Royal Highness was heard to remark to the Duchess of Connaught and his beautiful daughter, the Princess Patricia, "It's perfectly splendid, isn't it?"

The governor-general laid two cornerstones during his visit, for the Seamen's Institute and for the Provincial Library.

A lead box was placed in the altar alone containing pictures of the royal visitors, the lieutenant-governor and premier and others, views of Victoria, Vancouver and New Westminster, plans of the building, a provincial yearbook, sets of Canadian stamps and coins, and newspapers.

The climax of Victorians should call at this city were recognized when the Japanese Port Victor was brought into Esquimalt Harbor, inbound from Hong Kong in Vancouver, 15 years ago.

The Colonist, which had latterly for this service, recorded that it had been "literally laughed at by the entire mainland and a portion of the local press, the letter of which loved the 'terminal city,' so-called, 'but wisely not too well.' Well, the Chinese steamer which arrived yesterday has called on her inward voyage and will call on her outward. A victory has been won which to a few doubting Thomases seemed impossible."

Children were invited to see the beauties of the San Juan Islands on an excursion "to the old English camp and with stops at Roche and Friday Harbour at the latter port attending a Presbyterian festival and returning by moonlight."

"Fare for the round trip $1.25, admission to the festival 25 cents extra. A brass band will be in attendance."

"My main hope is if they ever let a woman go up in a capsule she's going to volunteer."

SPACE, the final horizon towards which man is hurling himself, is a weird, hostile paradox. It is next to nothingness, yet filled with the interplay of immense happenings that have moulded the earth and sun and stars. It is colder than any place on earth, yet it conveys tremendous amounts of heat to earth. It is criss-crossed with static-like radio waves, yet will not carry ordinary sound and is more silent than any terrestrial tomb. Despite manned orbital flights and instrumented deep space probes, space remains an unfathomed vastness.

It is riddled with radiation, shot through with meteors, warped by magnetic and gravitational forces. It is an enormity where the truisms of earth are no longer necessarily true.

Man can get away from the earth only by taking some of the earth with him — air, food, water, clothing—a whole environment wrapped in a shielding capsule of metal.

What bits of earth must go with him? How will he get along with them in the savage loneliness of space? And how far can he travel anyway—to the moon, to the ends of the solar system, to neighboring stars? And will he be in condition when he arrives at his far destination to accomplish anything?

These are the concerns of the newest specialists in medicine, the space doctor. He's something more than a physician. Physics, chemistry and engineering are also part of his ballistics, for what is known about space is far outweighed by the unknowns, none of which can be limited to one field of knowledge.

As astronomical distances are measured, man hasn't yet progressed very far.

An Appraisal

BY

Medical Association

"The one thing about space certain yet is whether we can put a man in the machines and get him to these places alive and in good health. You might say that the classic laws of medicine aren't that clear yet."

The space duet of Russia's two cosmonauts has dispelled some of the mysteries surrounding man's ability to exist in weightlessness. But many questions still need answering and weightlessness remains the most complex of the medical unknowns concerning space travel.

"The Russian flights," said Dr. Leberman, "have shown that man can sustain weightlessness physically and mentally for a round trip to the moon. But what we don't know yet is whether there is a price for such a trip in terms of health. We might not have this answer until we get a whole laboratory orbiting in space, rather than just a capsule.

The fact is that gravity has been as essential to human development as air, food and water. Without it the human form never would have evolved.

Man's whole being is attuned to gravity. Eliminate gravity for an extended period and changes are bound to take place. It remains to be seen how well man can adjust to these changes.

Importance of Gravity

An orbital shot requires a burst of speed of about 17,000 miles per hour. To reach the moon would require speeds up to 25,000 miles per hour. This difference in speed could compound the effects of weightlessness on an astronaut.

An Air Force physician, Capt. Duane E. Graveline, says he has found evidence that man may become "de-conditioned" to gravity. After seven days floating in water (the closest man can approach long-term weightlessness on earth) Capt. Graveline said he experienced general weakness and loss of muscular strength, along with changes in his blood chemistry.

Other "floating" experiments revealed that weightlessness, while pleasant at first, can become extremely irritating, leading to confusion and mental stress that in turn could lead to a fatal mistake in space.

These experiments also indicated that without the stimulus of gravity the circulatory system appears to lose some of its adaptability. This means that despite pressure suits and special couches the breaking effect on re-entry from a trip to the moon could overtax the blood supply system. The astronaut could become dizzy and faint, precisely at the critical moment when he needs all his facilities in preparation for landing.

Nourishment provides another possible predicament. Food is moved through the digestive system by wave-like muscular contractions, known as the peristalsis. Without the effects of gravity it's possible that these contractions would slow down or stop altogether, and the food would remain in the stomach rather than being absorbed into the body.

Thus an astronaut too long in space could conceivably starve to death with a full stomach.

Dr. Charles F. Gell, a specialist on space medicine, said it is possible that without gravity the cells of the body may not reproduce, grow or function as they should after a while. Since the body burns up millions of cells each day it would simply deteriorate if there were no replacements being manufactured.

It is also possible that an astronaut's bones might tend to decompose. Without the gravitational stresses that serve as stimuli, the body begins to reject calcium and other minerals. The bones become soft, weakened. Perhaps they could not hold up during re-entry.

Problems on Problems

This demineralization process can also have other consequences. Since the bones no longer absorb the calcium it is sent to the kidneys for elimination. But if the kidneys get too much calcium, the mineral is sometimes despoiled there forming kidney stones.

Effects exactly like these have been seen in long-term bedridden patients when the skeleton is relieved of most of its work.

There are studies underway however, presumably in Russia as well as here, aimed at overcoming weightlessness by applying spin to a space capsule. Centrifugal force would then provide an artificial gravity. Some recent experiments have shown that this might not be too practical—that an astronaut might not be able to orient himself while his capsule spins through space like a thrown football. Dr. James G. Gaume of Denver, chief of the Life Support Systems at the Martin Company, feels that many of the possible dangers of weightlessness may be overcome by performing enough exercises in orbit to compensate for the work load imposed on the human body by gravity.

A working astronaut, however, makes far greater demands on the extremely limited environment of his capsule than the spaceman who quietly goes along for the ride. To perform exercises an astronaut would need a larger oxygen supply, a more elaborate carbon dioxide absorbent system, a highly efficient dehumidifying device, additional food, etc.—more problems on top of problems.

Another major weight problem remaining to be solved is the amount of shielding required to make outer space livable for man. Deep in space, farther than all orbital flights to date, there is a thick veil of radiation known as the Van Allen Belt. Human tissues orbited through the Van Allen Belt in a high flying satellite have been damaged by the radiation.

Mental Factor Unknown

All this is only part of the problems faced by space medicine. For aside from the physical stresses there are also mental stresses. These in the long run may put more of a bind on space travel than anything else.

No man has yet experienced two rides into space, so there is still no indication of how much mental stamina is required to cope with the noise, vibrations and anxieties of blasting into space and returning.

Nor is there any way of determining how the long-term combination of weightlessness, tension, isolation and radiation exposure will affect the human brain and nervous system. A three-man space team might leave for a six-month round trip to Mars the best of friends but return with homicide in their hearts. "Compatibility," thinks Dr. Leberman, "will certainly be an important factor. This offers an interesting possibility: Should we have females aboard spacecraft? I think the possibility of husband and wife teams warrants consideration."

So far space medicine has confined itself to possible problems faced by orbiting and moon explorers. But when man attempts to wander into the emptiness beyond our satellite a whole new set of circumstances must be considered, some based on principles that seem profoundly unreal on earth. At present rocket speeds, it might take as long as 40 years to reach some of the outer planets. Beyond the solar system the distances become so vast they nearly defy comprehension. The nearest star, Alpha Centauri, is about four and a half light years away. To land on one of its planets (if it has planets) and return would take nine years, providing a man could travel at the speed of light. Lights travels at 186,000 miles per second. The highest speed attained by our deep space probe rockets is about seven miles per second.

Aside from the impossibility of a human body holding up under acceleration to such speeds, it is also impossible, according to Einstein's theories, for any material object to match the speed of light. Without approaching the speed of light, interstellar space flight would not be feasible. One noted physicist believes man is forever confined to his own solar system.

Perfectly Good Word

Regarding the reference to "kids" in Mr. Caldwell's letter, our children should not be insulted when they are called "kids." It is a perfectly good English word and was used by Shakespeare for a child.

A root word must be correct or other words could not be formed from it—i.e. kidnapper. In any case a kid (goat) is a lovely little animal, playful and affectionate—and clean.

Guns Or Butter

By PHIL NEWCOM

FOR years the people of the Soviet Union have been torn between the pie-in-the-sky promises of Soviet leaders and the hard realities of a life short on everything but spatulas.

Another of those hard realities hit them last week with the announcement that promised income tax cuts had been postponed "until further notice."

These cuts, first announced in May, 1960, were to have been carried out over a five-year period until all personal income tax was to have been abolished.

In July, 1961, the Communist party newspaper Pravda published a new program. It promised:

"In the current decade (1961-70) the Soviet Union will surpass the strongest and richest capitalist country, the United States, in production per head of population, the people's standard of living and their cultural and technical standards; everyone will live in easy circumstances; all collective and state farms will be highly productive and profitable enterprises; the demand of Soviet people for well-appointed housing will, in the main, be satisfied; hard physical work will disappear; the U.S.S.R. will become the country with the shortest work day."

Within the same 10 years, the program promised increases of 150 per cent in both industry and agriculture.

To achieve the highest living standard in the world, the Soviet planners not only promised to abolish income taxes but to lower retail prices as well.

Not even a year later, in June, 1962, the government in creamed meat and butter prices 25 to 30 per cent.

Both were in short supply and one way to cut down on the grumbling lines was to price them out of reach.

Before last week's postponement, taxes already had been abolished on incomes up to about $65 per month.

The announcement blamed the postponement on the "aggressive schemes of imperialism."

The truth of the matter seemed to be, as Khrushchev has indirectly admitted, the Soviet Union cannot afford both guns and butter.

'Castro Will Give Us Provocation'

WASHINGTON—The U.S. Ambassador to the Organization of American States thinks that Fidel Castro is going to invite hemispheric retaliation to his Communist subversion in the Americas. DeLoe says S. Morrison said Cuba is a base of Communist aggression and trained spies and agents are "not going to sit around twiddling their thumbs, but are going to give us the provocation we want."

This provocation, according to the diplomat, will be in the form of shipping arms and agents to other Latin American countries.

India Heads for Disaster

Too Many Mouths

By R. C. PANDE
from New Delhi

INDIA may pass her population point of no return by the end of her third five-year development plan in 1966, according to observers.

With her 440,000,000 inhabitants (1961 census), India ranks second in population and seventh in land area in the world. The Indian subcontinent now supports 15 per cent of the world's total population.

The strain that this explosive population growth has put on food resources worries planners. Former census registrar R. A. Gopalaswami placed food grain requirements for a population of 520,000,000 at a minimum of 108,000,000 tons per year.

Allowing for a population of 480,000,000 by 1966, a Ford Foundation agricultural production team, reporting in 1960, fixed a 100,000,000 to 110,000,000 tons requirement of food grains.

The team warned that on the basis of a 3.5 per cent yearly rate of increase recorded between 1952 and 1956, the annual gap between supply and demand as of 1966 would be 28,000,000 tons.

Edgar T. Hoover and Analee J. Conle of the Ford Foundation team commented: "No conceivable program of imports or rationing could meet a crisis of this magnitude."

The team indicated that even a downward trend in the birth rate beginning as soon as 1964 may be too late to permit increased living standards.

India's birth rate during the second development plan period (1956-1961) was 40.7 per 1,000, against a death rate of 1.6 per 1,000.

The director of the Indian Institute of Population Studies, Dr. Bipati Chandrasekhar, said recently on the All India Radio: "If all the health projects contained in India's third (development) plan are completed, the 21.6 per 1,000 death rate will register even a further decline."

"While this may be extremely welcome from the humanitarian point of view, it is estimated that India's population can reach the unmanageable figure of 520,000,000 by 1971."

How to Fight ASTHMA

At the first sign of wheezing, short breath, or coughing from recurring asthma, take the action indicated. It will save you a doctor's visit, keep your lungs clear, and help you breathe easier.

One noted physician believes man is forever confined to his own solar system.

While the decisive factor behind the explosion is the decline in India's death rate there are other significant socio-economic reasons that account for the tremendous increase.

Almost everyone in India, sooner or later, usually sooner, gets married.

Marriage is not merely a social institution but a semi-religious duty in the country. Hindus believe girls should be married before puberty.

The necessity of having a son to perform the "Shradha" (purification of the dead by means of offering sacred water and food to fire) ceremony at the funeral of the father, thereby assuring his salvation, also helps explain the universality of parenthood among Hindus.

Also to be reckoned with is the absence of any effective, widespread family planning among the rural population who constitute about 82 per cent of the total population. Birth control, even in the urban areas, is of recent origin. Realization of the urgency of the problem is evident from the provision of 270,000,000 rupees ($56,700,000) for family planning in the third plan period.

New Book Topples Dickens' Pedestal

By DON MARMALL

LONDON (CP) — Charles Dickens was a master of the novelists. His narrative skill could brew both hot Christmas punch and congealed prison gruel with an equal tang of realism.

The punch of Mr. Pickwick and Tiny Tim may have warmed our childhood but it was the gruel of Oliver Twist and Uriah Heep that taught and enthralled Dickens' artistic inspiration.

His bitter and keenly upspringing warped the framework of lent reformer nor a consistent his imagination. He became fascinated with crime and critics have suggested that his entire insight into cruelty, guilt and suffering reveals the brooding genius of Dostoevsky.

Recent studies of Dickens have concentrated on his near-pathological interest in prisons and punishment in an attempt to understand his complex and contradictory personality.

The latest, Dickens and Crime, by Philip Collins, confirms the modern view that Dickens was neither a benevolent humanitarian in his attitude to the social evils of his time.

He was, in fact, a fellow-traveler who linked himself with the enlightened ideas then current and later became as reactionary as his contemporaries. Collins says: "He never escaped from the moral categories of his age."

The young Dickens of Pickwick Papers and Oliver Twist was caught up in and gave popular expression to a general outcry against the prison system of the 1830s, especially in its treatment of children.

SAVAGE BEASTS

In the older Dickens the liberal sentiments hardened into a reactionary conviction that unrepentant criminals "should be crushed like savage beasts and cleared out of the way."

Dickens was not particularly optimistic about human nature. He had little faith in character reformation and repeatedly urged the harshest and cruellest deterrents should be employed against adult prisoners.

The legend of Dickens, the advanced liberal, with his statement that the street ruffian should be "scarified deep and often."

RIVAL IDEAS

He also believed it "right and necessary that there should be in jails some degraded kind of irksome work, belonging only to jails."

In the 1840s two rival penal systems vied for adoption as the most effective way to treat prisoners. The "separate system" demanded virtually perpetual solitary confinement. The "silent system" allowed prisoners to mingle but never speak.

SILENT SYSTEM

Dickens opposed the solitary system because of the psychological damage it caused by robbing the prisoner of his personality. But he strongly supported the hardly less rigorous silent system.

Dickens was capable of moral charity only with children and women. He helped to found a home for young prostitutes and in the running of it he was warm and humane. His instructions opposed puritanical sermonizing and advised: "fallen women must be tempted into virtue."

Seascape Barren, Lifeless

Perfect Beaches Hold No Charm for Divers

Says
Cal
Smith

While enjoyable swimming almost certainly requires a flat, shallow, sandy beach, such a place holds no charm for the skindiver, who finds the underwater seascape much like the arid deserts of the surface world — barren and lifeless.

As in the desert, there are, of course, always some creatures and objects of interest; but they are very few and when encountered once rarely justify the waste of time and air for a second visit.

Even the curious flatfish of the ocean, with its two eyes on the same side of its head and its unusual habit of swimming on its side, fails to arouse much excitement in the diver who has seen them many times before.

The reasons for the lack of life near sandy beaches are exactly the same as for the lack of life in the desert. No plant life grows there, and without vegetation animal life cannot survive.

Wherever reefs or even single rocks appear on the barren wasteland an oasis of life is formed. Seaweed, able at last to purchase a grip on bottom, grows from the rocks and provides shelter and food for many microscopic creatures who in turn are eaten by the larger animals; and a small community thrives in the midst of desolation.

However, if the beach is small and the bottom drops off sharply as it does in many unknown dangers lurking beyond the curtain of darkness ahead. He slows down, digging into the sand to support himself.

And then he is at the bottom; with mounds of leaves, logs and other debris that has found its way down the slope. And the sand is gone. In its place is silt and mud, fallen like snow from the surface and accumulated over the centuries.

The darkness has changed too. No longer is it the black, physical thing it was during the descent; but it's still there; grey now, and foreboding.

But the adventure is over. Going farther along the bottom is likely to offer very little of interest, and to travel along the side of the slope would only be an anti-climax.

And suddenly the water ahead darkens as the bottom drops quickly into a deep abyss.

Never in the surface world above will the skindiver experience a similar sensation. It's like walking in the bright sunlight and seeing, only a few yards ahead, the deep dusk of evening.

As he moves forward to peer over the edge of the slope, the bottom drops into an impenetrable blackness so that only a few feet are visible before it is obscured by the fog of depth.

Crawling forward now becomes a chore. With the yawning pit of blackness only a few feet away, the only contact with reality is the narrow strip of sand below him and, slightly heavier than the water around him, he tends to descend too fast.

Although he can never recall exactly what he thought at the time, his mind warns him of

Great Conducting Inspires Compelling New Fidelio

By DELOAN SMITH

A successful performance of Beethoven's only opera, "Fidelio," depends more upon the perceptions of the conductor than of all the singers put together, and the newest "Fidelio" recording had to be a tremendous success because Otto Klemperer was its conductor.

His surpassing reputation as a Beethoven conductor is well deserved as you'll realize when you listen to this superb performance of an opera which visually has little to recommend it. But musically it is more than merely persuasive. It is compelling.

Klemperer had the sensibility to treat the singing voices as though they were instruments of the orchestra. He wraps them into the orchestral score and creates a sound tapestry notable for wholeness and beauty.

The singers were Christa Ludwig, Jon Vickers, Gottlob Frick and Walter Berry and they were backed by the Philharmonia Orchestra and Chorus of London. The recording technicians did especially well in capturing the big sounds stereophonically (Angel 3625).

A new recording of Puccini's La Bohème is conducted by Erich Leinsdorf, former conductor at the Metropolitan Opera. Leinsdorf conducted the recording in the Rome Opera House during the summer but it is almost an all-Metropolitan cast. Richard Tucker was the Rodolfo, and there probably isn't a more effective one in opera today. And the Mimì was Anna Moffo who last season came into her own as one of the brightest of the younger stars.

The other Met stars in the cast were Robert Merrill as Marcello and Giorgio Tozzi as Colline. The orchestra and chorus were the Rome Opera's.

Leinsdorf's feelings for Puccini are sensitively variegated and always appropriate. He knows how to contrast the sweet sorrow with the bright gaiety and how to prevent the sentiment from overflowing into maudlin sentimentality. (RCA Victor 6085).

Four Stars Blend Talents To Produce Exotic Suite

By WILLIAM D. LAFFLER

Si Zentor, Martin Denny and Les Baxter are a powerful musical triumvirate and when you throw in a top-flight arranger such as Bob Florence you have something better than the Quartet from Rigolais.

All four of these gentlemen have a hand in "Exotic Suite" by Si Zentor and His Orchestra (Liberty LBS-14020).

Zentor, known for his swing style, plays the exotic sounds of Martin Denny as composed by Baxter and arranged by Florence.

The talents of all four blend smoothly on this suite of exotic music which ranges from tunes like Bambi Monkey Dance to esoteric numbers such as "Stolen Ideal."

The record was made in Liberty's Poly 120 sound technique, which is praiseworthy.

"Night Time" is the name of Mitch Miller's latest sing-along LP (Columbia CL1884). While the title may be confusing, the music isn't. Mitch and his gang give all listeners and listeners-in-a-good-time a good time.

"Sweet Georgia Brown" (Don't Bring Lulu) and a tip fairly recent one.

For Dancers—More Dance Along With Lesper by Vincent Lopez and His Hotel Taft Orchestra (MGM E 4055) is an exceptionally good LP for dancing with 30 tunes ranging from the classic to the latest.

from twist through to Dixieland, to Mambo.

Starboard Single—"Caravan of Lonely Men" by The Lafayetteaires (RCA Victor 47-5082). "What Kind of Fool Am I?" by Woody Herman (Phillips 40-064). "Shy Guy" by The Crystals (Crystalite 752). "Larkin's Cool" by The Journeymen (Capitol 4529).

LP's of the Week—Mono: "A Swingin' Safari" by Billy Vaughn and his Orchestra (Dot DLP 3458). Vaughn is always dependable. You can buy his records sound unheard and know you've got good music. This one is no exception. Stereo: "Rome Revisited" by the Ray Charles Singers (Command RS 930 SD). Unbelievably realistic sound on 33 rpm. magnetic film transferred to a recording without any loss of tonal quality. This is one of the outstanding records of the year.

Toronto Earns Culture Title

By E. D. WARD HARRIS

What is the current cultural capital of Canada? Montreal? Winnipeg? Vancouver? Wrong, wrong, wrong. The title, believe it or not, belongs to Toronto. If you're surprised, Torontonians are stunned. They hardly believe the evidence of their own eyes and ears. It's not surprising really when you consider that only five years ago entertainment-starved Torontonians used to drive in droves to Buffalo for the weekend in hopes of finding something to do.

Dynamic Change in Five Years

What a difference today. For one thing people are flocking to Toronto from Buffalo, and even Detroit, Ottawa and Montreal to help pack the booming theatres and concert halls.

What's the big attraction? Quality in quantity.

STAGGERING
The quantity is staggering. Between now and the end of May Toronto will stage at least 1,000 concerts, almost 100 professional and semi-professional theatrical productions, six weeks of ballet and at least two weeks of opera.

In addition, night clubs with quality stage shows abound, and art galleries are booming. In fact, Toronto claims to have replaced Montreal as Canada's centre for both painting and music. Here are some of the shows Torontonians will have the chance to see this winter.

What's Next?

Today, tomorrow — Victoria Symphony orchestra, Overture, Royal Theatre, 3 p.m. (today) and 8:30 p.m. (tomorrow).

Tomorrow — Theatre organ, variety and special films, Fox Theatre, 8 p.m. Tomorrow through Oct. 8 — Ladies in Retirement, Langham Court Theatre, 8:15 p.m. nightly.

Tuesday — Film Cavalcade, Beautiful B.C., Oak Bay Junior High School, 7:30 p.m.

Wednesday — Naughty Marietta, filmed operetta, Odeon Theatre, 2 and 8:15 p.m.

Wednesday — The Tanner Sisters, Oak Bay Junior High School, 8:30 p.m.

Thursday — Scots Greys and Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, Memorial Arena, 8:30 p.m.

October 8 — White Heather Concert Party, Royal Theatre, 8:30 p.m.

October 9 — Film Cavalcade, Around Britain, Oak Bay Junior High School, 7:30 p.m.

October 10 — The Merry Widow, filmed operetta, Odeon Theatre, 2 and 8:15 p.m.

October 11 — Dmitro Hnatyuk, Royal Theatre, 8:30 p.m.

October 14, 15 — Victoria Symphony orchestra, Royal Theatre, 3 p.m. (14th) and 8:30 p.m. (15th).

The London hit musical Oliver BEFORE its Broadway opening; the main touring company of My Fair Lady; Flanders and Swann in Drop of a Hat; the D'Oyle Carte company with Gilbert and Sullivan; School for Scandal, starring Sir John Gielgud and Sir Ralph Richardson; the new Rodgers and Hammerstein show BEFORE its Broadway opening; several Shakespearean plays.

And that's not all.

Playing now is Beyond the Fringe with the original London company — on its way to New York. The Broadway hit How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying, the famous play Milk and Honey and Shaw's Arms and the Man are among other shows Toronto will see this winter.

Jack Benny is taking his company for a visit. Rod Steiger stars in Moby Dick. Brendan Behan's Hostage will be aired. And so on, and so on.

JEREMIAHS WRONG

The shows not mentioned here would in themselves make up a scintillating season for almost any other city.

The emphasis is on quality throughout. And Toronto is showing its appreciation by packing the theatres, concert halls and clubs, and thus giving ing the lie to the Jeremiahs who wall that TV has killed the living stage.

And speaking of television, Toronto is also the king-pin city of Canada for that, too. And small wonder with all that talent around. The same thing applies as far as radio is concerned.

But there's more to the Toronto scene than the sheer abundance of entertainment.

The city is already attracting dynamic people clamoring for expression in the lively and allied arts — actors, painters, musicians and film-makers.

HEALTHIEST SIGN

But perhaps the healthiest sign of all is that Torontonians are going home from a concert, a circus or a musical to read the outpourings of rebellious poets and thought-provoking messages in the new satirical magazines.

Healthy, because the poets and satirists are home-grown.

Busy, Exciting Week Opens City Season

Choice Of Treats

By BERT BINNY

Like British pubs which, according to Stephen Leacock, "open and shut like daisies in the sun," Victoria's various artistic organizations pop forth in full flower—never fortunately, in unison, but certainly close together.

And right now is popping time.

The Theatre Guild blossomed out yesterday and the Victoria Symphony orchestra follows today with the Film Cavalcade on Tuesday, the Musical Art Society on Wednesday and Famous Artists on Thursday.

It all makes for a busy and exciting week, or even month. The entertainment calendar for October bristles with 22 events as of now and it includes a bright variety extending from Symphony concerts and a Ukrainian singer through Chinese theatre and a German choir to a Magic and Mystery Show and a Military Tattoo.

All this is live. In the realm of filmed operettas, the Odeon Theatre has Naughty Marietta for this Wednesday at 2 and 8:15 p.m.

The Victor Herbert opus was originally filmed in 1935 with a cast headed by Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy.

The three Tanner sisters—Anne Tanner Harris of Victoria, Aurline Tanner Lewis of Medicine Hat and Irene Tanner Elton of Edmonton—give the Musical Art Society's 1962-63 season a blonde and melodious send-off on Wednesday evening.

Their program starts at 8:30 at Oak Bay Junior High School. All three are thoroughly accomplished musicians, as they proved in their appearance at the Butchart Gardens Sunset Show of July 16.

Aurline is a lyric soprano who will sing items including a group from the works of Brahms.

She will also offer Rimsky-Korsakoff's Song of the Bride which is performed without accompaniment, as well as four folk tunes, each in its original language.

Actually six are to be played covering a period among composers from Beethoven who was born in 1770 to Debussy who died in 1918. The Overtures themselves, however, are all 19th Century. Beethoven provides the Overture to Leonore (or Fidelio) (1805-14), and Debussy the Prelude to Afternoon of a Faun (1894).

In between are the Overture to Zampa (1831) by Louis Herold, Tchaikovsky's famous 1812 Overture (1882), and the Preludes to Verdi's La Traviata (1853) and Wagner's Die Meistersinger von Nurnberg (1868).

The theatre organ, variety and special film shows at the Fox Theatre are now monthly instead of weekly affairs, taking place on the first Monday in each month.

Performers tomorrow evening at 8 are singer Irene Henderson, the accordion duo of Betty Warren and Joan Hopper, emcee Arthur Budd and organist Reg Stone.

A color film, Continental Holiday, a cartoon and a Sing-Along session are also on the program.

Film Cavalcade, a joint venture by the Greater Victoria School Board, the Victoria Public Library and the National Film Board, opens close to home—Tuesday evening with a program of films called Beautiful B.C.

Included are Tall Country, Fraser's River, Journey from Zero, Columbia Adventure and Most Lovely Country.

The program starts at 7:30 p.m. at Oak Bay Junior High School with 19 others to follow, every Tuesday except Dec. 25 and Jan. 1, at the same time and place.

Continuing the current series of filmed operettas, the Odeon Theatre has Naughty Marietta for this Wednesday at 2 and 8:15 p.m.

The three Tanner sisters—Anne Tanner Harris of Victoria, Aurline Tanner Lewis of Medicine Hat and Irene Tanner Elton of Edmonton—give the Musical Art Society's 1962-63 season a blonde and melodious send-off on Wednesday evening.

Life Too Short

Recently listed as one of 35 Negro millionaires in America, singer Johnny Mathis said yesterday he "never wanted to go this far." The 26-year-old idol deplored business meetings he has to attend, saying, "Life is too short and I won't get that time back. Why should I waste time sitting around with people who talk about money?"

Anne offers a variety of items which includes Donde Liete from Puccini's La Boheme and, with Aurline, sings the Flower Duet, Scusi quella fronda di ciliegio, from Act II of Madame Butterfly.

Irene is the accompanist and the trio unites for the closing number on the program which has Offenbach's famous Barcarolle from Tales of Hoffman, I Feel Pretty, from West Side Story, and the exquisite Lullaby of Johannes Brahms.

The massed hands, pipes, drums and dancers of the Scottish Regiments of the Royal Scots Greys and the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders are uniting their talents for a tour of Canada and the United States which brings them to Memorial Arena on Thursday evening.

They have already appeared at Madison Square Garden in New York and at the World's Fair in Seattle. They provide a thrilling program of music, dancing and extraordinary precision drills.

The Scottish invasion also includes the White Heather concert party at the Royal Theatre on Monday evening.

Dmitro Hnatyuk (it's pronounced Anachuk), a prominent singer from the Russian Ukraine, is at the Royal Theatre on October 11.

Mr. Hnatyuk, accompanied by Rosalia Elvoza, is performing in 14 Canadian cities on a cultural exchange tour and gives a program of folk songs and operatic items.

If this recital attains the standard displayed by other solo Russian performers who have been in Victoria recently, such as Belayev and Doloukhanova, we are in for a tremendous treat.

Blonde and vivacious Tanner Sisters (that's Anne Tanner Harris of Victoria in the centre) open the Victoria Musical Art Society concert season at Oak Bay Junior High School on Wednesday.

U.S. Job Crisis Topped Only by Canada

WASHINGTON (AP)—Unemployment has been running higher in the U.S. than in any other industrial nation of the free world except Canada, a panel of economists reported to President Kennedy Saturday.

The finding was the most surprising in a four-length report issued by the presidential committee named 10 months ago to judge the reliability and usefulness of the government's monthly statistics on employment.

The six-man team of professionals—including labor and industry economists—rejected emphatically the charges heard from time to time that the job reports understate or overstate unemployment significantly or are distorted for political purposes.

However, the committee recommended many revisions and additions to the job data.

"After careful investigation, the committee has unanimously and categorically concluded that doubt concerning the scientific objectivity of the agencies responsible for collecting, processing and publishing employment statistics is unwarranted," the report said.

It confirmed also the basic accuracy of studies showing that U.S. unemployment for years has been higher than that of her major free world partners. The difference usually has been explained away on the ground that different yardsticks are used for unemployment abroad.

THEORY DEMOLISHED

This comforting theory was demolished by the report. Reduced in the terms used here, the composite unemployment rate of seven foreign countries in 1960 averaged only 2.1 per cent of the labor force. The rate here was 5.6 per cent.

The rates were 7 per cent for Canada, 1.9 per cent for France, 1 per cent for West Germany, 2.4 per cent for Britain, 4.3 per cent for Italy, 1.1 per cent for Japan and 1.3 per cent for Sweden.

The study gave several possible explanations, the foremost being the phenomenal industrial full service when they go to expansion of Western Europe work Monday morning.

Kohler Strike Settled

REBOYGAN, Wis. (UPI)—The longest U.S. labor dispute—a battle which turned bitter years—ended Saturday with agreement between the United Auto Workers and the Kohler Co., a big plumbing firm.

Terms of the contract were not disclosed and it must still be ratified by the membership of UAW's Macbogan local. But these were formalities, overshadowed by the end of one of the longest fights between industry and labor in the history of the U.S. union movement since 3,300 UAW members went on strike against Kohler on April 5, 1954.

After years of building its strength, the NFO a month ago began keeping cattle, hogs and sheep off the market in an attempt to boost and stabilize farmers' income.

What has been accomplished? Opinions vary. Most NFO officials and members say they still believe they can achieve their goals—long-term contracts with processors, calling for higher prices for farm products.

BONE WAVING

But some members, faced with mortgage payments, school costs, and day-to-day bills, are wavering.

And packing plant officials and farmers who have not joined the NFO say the drive was doomed before it began.

Hospital Still Troubled

VERNON (CP)—Jubilee Hospital Association agreed Friday night to raise its borrowing power from $15,000 to $30,000 at a special meeting but could not agree on how to overcome long-term financial difficulties and differences with the British Columbia Hospital Insurance Service.

About 60 people attended the stormy meeting and heard hospital board members explain why it is impossible for the hospital to stay within budgets set by BCHIS.

But when a resolution was introduced by Russell Large, a member of the hospital board, that the board be instructed to stay within its budget, the motion was tabled.

Why So Obstinate?

There are still a lot of gleefully claiming an unemployment rate of only four per cent.

This is a big improvement on what obtained a few years ago, but it is to be noted Italy has compulsory military service to take up the slack, and the official figures also show the amount of female labor in the country is running a great deal behind most other leading western countries.

Only 22 per cent of Italian women are gainfully employed and the men workers outnumber the females by nearly three to one. Under such circumstances in Canada alone, there would not be any unemployment but a great shortage of people to fill the existing jobs.

Layoff Pay Gaining Strong Support

By HARRY YOUNG (Colonist Business Editor)

A growing movement by Canadian companies to augment unemployment benefits to their employees when they temporarily close down their operations is calculated to be an important step toward removing economic distress in such circumstances.

Many companies find it more economical to close down during periods of seasonal slackness than to operate below capacity over a lengthy period.

Others faced with maintenance and renewal operations prefer to close down altogether rather than operate under difficulties while maintenance and renewal work is progressing.

In order to avoid distress and community upset—particularly in one industry town—the innovation of guaranteed income plans for employees during lay-offs has much to commend it and is becoming increasingly acceptable.

At the same time it should be noted that, statistically at least, it does not alter the employment picture—it merely removes the discomfort.

In a recent statement to shareholders the brewery firm of John Labatt Ltd., which has a brewery in Victoria, reports its new three year agreement with its workers provides for layoff income supplementary to unemployment insurance benefits with a minimum of $45 a week for a single worker and $55 for one who is married.

When the B.C. Cement plant at Bamerton closes down later this winter for its annual retit and repair, its workers will also be guaranteed an income for the period of the layoff.

The plan, of course, is a poor substitute for continual employment, but in a period when many industries are over-producing and are subject to closures, the movement has its merits.

The news that MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Ltd. had followed the lead of its great U.S. rival, Weyerhaeuser Co. in reducing its price of pulp, brought some selling of the B.C. company shares. The price dropped about five per cent in market value as a result—$19 to $18.

Although Mac-Powell does not show where its profits emanate—lumber, newspaper, pulp and plywood sales are lumped together—the probability is the selling on Mac-Powell shares on the weakening of the pulp market may have been overdue.

Mac-Powell has two large pulp plants, one at Harmac and the other at Port Alberni—but not all by any means of its pulp product is sold as such.

A large percentage of the pulp produced at Port Alberni goes into an adjacent building for processing into newspaper, and when the firm's number 2 newspaper machine goes into operation within the next year or so, the amount of pulp available for the outside market will be smaller still.

At Harmac, too, part of the pulp is shipped to the company's main newspaper mill at Powell River, where it is used to strengthen the fibre of the sulphite pulp which is largely used in that operation.

Thus it might well be the decrease in the price of pulp would not so greatly affect the earning capacity of Mac-Powell as would a reduction in price of several other of its leading products.

The Canadian Pacific Railway isn't lying down to criticism that it should be lenient, if not generous, in its land deals because it originally got them as a gift.

Fred Stone, the company's vice-president of natural resources said in Calgary CPR had earned every acre of land it got by carrying out its obligations with the government of Canada.

The shareholders of CPR took the biggest business risk that was ever taken in this country when they undertook to build and operate a railway joining British Columbia with the rest of Canada at a time when there was nothing out here to speak of but Indians and buffaloes.

Race Troubles Boil in China

ROMBAY (CP)—Racial troubles are being reported from Communist China, which Premier Chou En-lai once described as "a heaven of tolerance and harmony between various peoples and communities."

In recent weeks a number of incidents involving African and Asian students and local Chinese have taken place at various educational centres in Red China. Some were accompanied by violence.

The diplomatic correspondent of the Hindustan Times of New Delhi says China's program of fraternization with African countries is running into serious difficulties. Travellers from Hong Kong also report that riots have taken place at many universities between Chinese and African students.

Thirty students who went to Red China from Cameroon have returned home with complaints of racial discrimination. They said that they were "shunned" by the Chinese and socially ostracized. They were also denied access to shops open to other foreign students.

Trains to Roll In Midwest

CHICAGO (AP)—Settlement of the 30-day Chicago and North Western Railway strike has given the green light to idle passenger and freight trains in nine states.

Freight and passenger service will resume shortly, said North Western chairman Ben Heineman.

The news elated freight car-starved shippers of grain, livestock and sugar beets in the harvest-heavy middle west.

Some 35,000 Chicago commuters have been promised full service when they go to expansion of Western Europe work Monday morning.

The new MGB—more engine, more room

The Car Corner

Fans'll Scream, But—

By J. T. JONES

Those who have already peeped at the pictures above have a good idea of what two interesting new cars look like. Every time MG brings out a new model, loud cries arise from MG enthusiasts. "You shouldn't have changed it," they say. "Now you've ruined it."

They said it when MG gave up its much-prized single overhead-cam engine long before the war. They said it when the squat TD replaced the high-wheeled TC. They said it when the sloping radiator for TP replaced the TD, and when the envelope-boded MGA replaced all the clam-shell-fendered T series.

So, now that the MGB is out, we know what to expect. First, the MG lovers will hate it. Second, they'll buy it by the thousands, and third, they'll learn to love it and squeal up a storm when it turns it yields to something else.

The new features of the MGB are few and noteworthy. New styling, by Michel out of Caravelle.

Bigger engine—1,800 cc, 85 horsepower.

Wind-up windows at long last.

Two rear seats for small children or acrobatic dwarfs.

Price tag in the $3,000 range in Canada.

As always, the MGB will be a fast and roadworthy car. The changes apart from styling and price tag, are aimed at making it appeal to more people; added power, added room, added comfort.

And now that I think of it, these were the three things the MGA could have stood improvement in.

Renault has a strong new contender in the little car field with its R8, just introduced.

Renault says nothing about horsepower for this rear-engine baby, but whatever it has at first, plenty more will be available. The engine, a water-cooled four, is designed to take the stress of high output. Its crankshaft has five main bearings—i.e., every crank journal is supported on both sides—and the loads this arrangement can take are incredible.

It's a feature that is spreading slowly through the small car field, having been for decades confined to racing engines.

Another competition car feature standard on the R8 is the mounting of disc brakes on all four wheels. Do you suppose Renault is up to something?

Oh, come, now—they would not put four doors on a racing car.

Down here near the bottom of the column we finally reach the dream car—Chevrolet's new Corvette. Improved is scarcely the word for this one, from all accounts. Revolutionized might come closer.

The Corvette almost from its birth has been a fine sports car—very powerful, very fast, very roadworthy.

But there was a handful of production sports cars, all several times its price, that could beat it. Those days, I think, are gone.

Canadians Given Voice In U.S. Lumber Probe

WASHINGTON (UPI)—Renewed Congressional pressure against Canadian lumber imports has set the stage for this week's U.S. Tariff Commission hearings on the lumber industry's demand for quotas.

The hearings may last as long as two weeks at all sides, including Canadian spokesmen expected to be heard. No decision is expected, however, until at least January.

Whatever you may think of its Motorama styling, its folding headlights and all, this Corvette is built for chop-down driving.

The big changes are in balance and suspension. Now Corvette has a much-needed independent rear suspension that is quite similar in geometry to the latest in Grand Prix setups. The double-jointed axles form the lower link, a transverse leaf spring (no room for any other kind) forms the upper link, and a couple of trailing arms steady everything fore and aft.

Sounds complicated, but it isn't, really. Test results so far agree it's highly effective.

Since the previous Corvette's chief lack was the ability to turn its massive power into performance, because of the traction limitations of its solid axle, the natural expectation is that the new one will walk away from the old.

The new version is smaller in every direction, and has a shorter wheelbase, which will add to its agility. It weighs roughly 40 pounds less—actually insignificant because of the varying loads of fuel and people.

Two body styles are now offered: roadster, as always, and fastback coupe, the version GM intends for competition.

And I will be astounded if the production sports car racing championship of the United States isn't won by one of these.

Congressmen from hard-hit Pacific Northwest states have stepped up their complaints, and a measure to lower lumber transportation costs has moved halfway through Congress.

Congressional clamp-downs have been promised if no restrictions result from the hearings or from U.S.-Canadian negotiations which resume later in October.

Red's Talking Politics

Hockey-Playing MP Faces Busy Schedule

By HELEN ALLEN

TORONTO (TNS)—If you happen to be on a Toronto-Ottawa (or vice-versa) flight this year have a look at the male passengers.

If one of them has a pair of skates in one hand and a briefcase in the other, it won't need his red hair to prove you are travelling with Leonard Patrick (Red) Kelly, Maple Leaf centre star and Liberal MP for York West.

It won't matter what day you conduct your search.

Red Kelly's present plans are to fly to Ottawa and back every day except Saturday and Sunday as he tries to combine the two careers of professional hockey player and Member of Parliament.

He's been told by Howie Meeker, the only other hockey star elected during his playing career, that it can't be done.

HE'S CONFIDENT

But his schedules are better now than when Howie was a member, says Red confidently. We sat in the lobby of the Empress Hotel in Peterborough where Leafs have been training and talked about the problem.

Red sees himself becoming an almost daily Toronto-Ottawa commuter, with a round trip of about 500 miles.

He'll practice with the team here in the morning. He'll fly to Ottawa to be in the House afternoon and evening. The House sits till 10 p.m. Then he'll fly back. "It's only a 50-minute flight," said the speedy star cheerily, "and I like flying. I can catch up with my reading."

Return fare to Ottawa is $32 first class, $38 economy. If the House should all through the hockey season (and October to April is only seven months compared to the nine months it sometimes lasts) air fares could be as much as $8,000 and not much less than $5,000.

A Member's salary is $10,000. Red Kelly hasn't signed his hockey contract for this season yet.

The delay, he says, is partly because of salary and partly position. Last year he was said to be in the $19,000 class.

"I haven't talked to Punch (Punch Imlach, Leafs' general manager) about money, and I want to have a talk to Mr. Pearson to see what's expected of me in Ottawa before I sign," he said.

Meantime he's working hard to be ready for both jobs.

SKATING TO OTTAWA

Having survived the Leafs' rigorous training camp program, Red is working out by himself while the rest of the team travels through the West. Some skating every day is a must.

He worked for the Liberals in the Stormont by-election in July, went to meetings, studied current affairs and the setup of Parliament.

When he flew to Winnipeg with the Leafs for their exhibition game last week his "light" travel reading was the 648-page Glensco report on Canadian Government operations.

He doesn't even like to think of another election campaign right away, and doubts if there will be one before spring.

TOUGH SCHEDULE

This is the first week politics and hockey have really overlapped for Red Kelly, and he looks tired.

No wonder. Here is his schedule for the first two days:

Sunday night late: Arrives home from Winnipeg. Monday morning: Drives to Peterborough to be on ice at 9 a.m.

Monday afternoon: After 2:30 workout, drives home to Leaside. Rushes to meeting in Long Beach. Back home after meeting. Drives wife and two children to Simcoe to leave babies with Grandma Kelly. Arrives home 7:30 a.m.

Tuesday morning: Misses 8 a.m. Peterborough workout. Arrives with "pretty exhausted" wife 11:30 a.m. No time for lunch. Goes right to arena where Leafs practice. Drives to Ottawa.

Maybe that some progress he's planning won't be so tough after all.

Pennant Race Goes Down to Last Day As Giants Split and Dodgers Blanked

Two-hit pitching by Ernie Broglio gave St. Louis Cardinals a 2-0 victory over the reeling Los Angeles Dodgers last night and sent the National League into the final day of the schedule with the pennant race still unsettled.

Dodgers were assured of at least a tie and a playoff with San Francisco when Houston Johnny Podres (13-12), the Cards' Curt Simmons (9-10).

At one stretch after Moon singled, Broglio retired 17 Dodgers in a row. He struck out nine, walked three, and never let a Dodger past second base.

An error by Frank Howard paved the way for Cards' two runs in the second inning. Charley James and Broglio followed it with singles for the runs. They also loaded the bases with one out in the third, but Ken Boyer hit into a double play.

Giants bombed the Colts for nine runs in the first two innings of the first game, getting home runs from Tom Haller, Willie McCovey and Orlando Cepeda.

But Houston's Bob Bruce, giving himself the distinction of a winning season (10-5) with the lowly Colts, stopped them on six hits in the second game. Ex-Dodger Norm Larker put Colts ahead to stay with a two-run homer in the third off lower Juan Marichal.

Kapp and Receivers Blitz Eskimos, 46-24

EDMONTON — Joe Kapp and his fleet-footed receivers gave Edmonton's biggest football crowd a display of aerial acrobatics which completely spoiled "Rollie Miles Night" at Edmonton. Kapp combined with rookie Mack Burton for touchdown plays which covered 73 and 68 yards, with Willie Fleming for 54 yards, with rookie Tom Larchfield for 39 and 14 yards, and with Jim Carpin for three yards. And Kapp scored himself with a one-yard plunge after two passes, to Pat Clarke for 21 yards and Carpin for 28, and a 15-yard run by Willie Fleming had set it up.

It was the most impressive display of quick-striking power Edmonton fans had seen in some time.

After being held the first time they got the ball, the Lions scored touchdowns the next three times they got possession as they moved into a 20-0 lead.

Kapp got the first one as the Lions took 10 plays to go 82 yards. Burton got his first after a 19-yard pass to Fleming had moved the Lions out to their 37-yard line. Burton took the ball on the 50 and just ran away from would-be tacklers.

On the first play after Sonny Homer had intercepted a pass thrown by ex-Lion Jim Walden, Kapp threw long to Fleming, who juggled the ball, then caught it on the five-yard line and went over.

TWO MORE BOWNS

A field goal by Ted Tully put Eskimos into the score sheet and it was 24-0 late in the second quarter when Kapp threw 39 yards to Fleming, got a first down in two ground plays, lost 10 yards on a holding penalty, and then hit Larchfield on the Edmonton 25. Larchfield went the rest of the way, and it was 27-0 at the half.

Perhaps relaxing the Lions suddenly found themselves threatened as the Eskimos got into the game. Kapp threw 39 yards to Fleming, got a first down in two ground plays, lost 10 yards on a holding penalty, and then hit Larchfield on the Edmonton 25. Larchfield went the rest of the way, and it was 27-0 at the half.

Wesley Gives Himself Another Day Wins Both Sandown Feature Events

Wesley Jones popped up at Sandown Park yesterday just as he did last year when he rode three winners in one day. Winless since he rode Erant Prince to an upset win in the first race of the current meeting but not too busy, Wesley made the most of his chance to shine before a Saturday crowd of 4,417 racing fans. Getting his first mounts in the two feature races, he won the marathon invitational handicap aboard Eastern Scout, came right back in the next race, the Percy Fox Memorial Handicap, to steer Mandy's Magic to the winners circle.

Jones looked particularly helpful in his second win. At his best on an off track, Mandy's Magic got the kind of footing he liked best but he was collared twice and had to be kept running.

Peppercorn charged to rip Rebel Lea for place money but was making little impression on the winner.

It was the idling on the cable for Jones, who had vindicated himself, and Eastern Scout, in the previous race.

The previous Saturday, over the same mile and three-eighths route, Jones and Eastern Scout tied until the last jump, when Pay Mike made it for a photo finish. Jones, understandably missed, blamed Uncle Hanswily, who forced Eastern Scout almost all the way.

Coho Derby Ends Today

The fish to beat in the Cerebral Palsy coho derby, which ends today at 2 p.m. in Saanich Inlet, is an 11.6-pounder landed yesterday by Bert Southern, of 3076 Balfour, and weighed in at Anchorage Boat House.

More than 100 fishermen turned out yesterday for the annual derby, sponsored by the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association and the Lions Club.

About 30 coho were weighed in at the three checkpoints, but many jacksprings, ineligible for this competition, were also caught.

Fishing resumes at day-break today and prizes will be presented at 3 p.m. at the Anchorage.

Gregory Wins Pole Position

SEATTLE (AP) — Masten Gregory of London earned the pole position in today's Northwest Grand Prix sports car race Saturday with a track record lap time of 1:32.2 in qualifying runs.

Pete Lovely of Seattle won the formula-junior race, a $3,500 prize in the Grand Prix, with a first-place finish in the first heat and second place in the second heat.

Huskies Beat Illinois Stanford Trips Spartans

Washington Huskies, who tied Purdue 7-7 in their opener last weekend, came back yesterday with a 26-7 victory over Illinois that made their prospects in the college football picture look rather bright.

In other major games yesterday, Stanford knocked off sixth-ranked Michigan State, 16-13; Notre Dame upset Oklahoma, 13-7, and second-ranked Ohio State trounced North Carolina, 41-7.

Top-ranked Alabama won its second straight, 44-0, from Tulane Friday night.

Indications are that Satellite Channel will be opened to net fishermen Oct. 5, and with the Sooke-Saan Inlet area for net fishing in October.

Statistics we have at hand do show that few commercial fishermen are making a living wage, but we feel the answer to making more money may not lie in raising the salmon grounds with (and of) nets as thick as few salmon have the opportunity to get through.

The fishing industry has become so efficient it is frightening, particularly when anyone can become a commercial fisherman for a $1 license.

There must be a new look at the fishing industry... both sport and commercial... moonlighters must be banned from the commercial picture and the bona fide commercial fleet must be reduced to a practical size; as commercial fishermen can make good living wages without having to be so highly competitive that they raid the runs to the detriment of sports fishermen and the industry generally.

OUTDOORS with Alec Merriman

British Columbia's commercial fishing fleet should be drastically reduced... by one third or more.

This is one point upon which both commercial fishermen and sports fishermen agree. Another point upon which they are in agreement is that the ultimate answer to better salmon fishing... both for sport and commercial... is to a crash program of river rehabilitation to protect and increase salmon runs.

A chart has been made on these programs... at Jones Creek on the mainland, Robertson Creek, Big Qualicum and Great Central Lake on Vancouver Island, with Goldstream, near Victoria, under study.

But this is really just a drop in the bucket compared to the need to replace and build up the ever-declining salmon stocks.

A crash program spending $10,000,000 a year on stream rehabilitation would be in order and hydro and logging industries which have contributed to the deterioration of the rivers and streams could be expected to help.

After our column appealing to Victoria MP A. Del. McPhillips, as parliamentary secretary to federal fisheries minister Angus MacLean, to find out what has happened to the sport fishing off the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Bay waterfront and to investigate the fence of salmon fishing nets at the entrance of Juan de Fuca Strait, we had a visit from a rather angry delegation of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union.

We also had some letters from angry commercial fishermen... and their wives.

We had no letters from the sports fishermen, but we did get a few congratulatory phone calls and personal visits.

The commercial fishermen were bitter and accused this column of picking on one particular section of the fishing industry... the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait... when we should be concentrating on the overall decline of salmon stocks everywhere and the need to build them up again. They pointed out that the commercial fishermen are as interested, or more interested, in conservation as the sports fishermen, and that in some areas, including Victoria, Campbell River and Courtenay, commercial and sports fishermen are working side by side to do something about rehabilitation of salmon runs.

When we produced a scrapbook with a score or more articles detailing those very problems and their participation they were surprised. They then realized that although we had attacked one particular bothersome aspect of their industry in one column, we have suggested many more common problems in scores of other columns. They left with the intention of subscribing to the Colonist.

They didn't deny the chain of nets across the entrance to the Juan de Fuca Strait.

They said it was necessary to make a living. That up until the time of our column they had had only 14 days of net fishing in that area, which was true.

But the fact is that when they were restricted to one or two days of netting it was to protect the sockeye coming through the Strait, and sports fishermen don't catch sockeye. When they were allowed five days—cut to three days after the column appeared—they were fishing for the coho, the same fish the sports fishermen hope to share. Even the coho which get past when no netting is allowed are swept up by salmon netters who start at Sooke when netting resumes and pick up many of the salmon that got through.

Keep in mind the fact that the northern areas were closed, which brought a heavy concentration of gear into the San Juan area... When the (this column) speaks of the department relaxing the regulations to permit a five-day week after the salmon commission ends its period of control, has he investigated the fishing time allowed the American fishermen who exploit these same waters? asks Tom Parkin of UFAWU in a letter to the Colonist.

A spokesman for the Fisheries Department noted that fishing had become so efficient at the mouth of the Fraser River, that drastic restrictions were imposed, because fishermen with the equipment they now have could fish out the whole Fraser River run. Because they have been shoaled out of the Fraser in the past few years they now concentrate at other places particularly the San Juan where they have a chance to get some American runs, the Cowichan River and other runs, as well as Fraser River runs.

This is no compensation to the sports fishermen in Juan de Fuca Strait, who are getting practically no coho at all.

Indications are that Satellite Channel will be opened to net fishermen Oct. 5, and with the Sooke-Saan Inlet area for net fishing in October.

Statistics we have at hand do show that few commercial fishermen are making a living wage, but we feel the answer to making more money may not lie in raising the salmon grounds with (and of) nets as thick as few salmon have the opportunity to get through.

Greaves Scores Four Spurs Blast Notts Forest

LONDON (Reuters) — Tottenham Hotspur, England's top soccer team for the last three years, shook off its recent indifferent form to thrash Nottingham Forest 9-2 Saturday in an English League soccer match.

One win in their previous four games was not the sort of form expected from Spurs, the Football Association Cup holders. But their brilliant, confident performance at home Saturday provided an explosive answer to critics who advocated new blood to replace Tottenham's aging stars.

Every forward found the net, with Jimmy Greaves getting four goals.

Greaves scored three goals in helping Spurs to a 6-1 halftime lead, after Forest had opened the scoring in the fifth minute.

Others to beat luckless goalkeeper Peter Grummitt were Cliff Jones (2), John White, Terry Medwin and Les Allen (penalty).

Nottingham held third place in the first division before the hammering, but Spurs displaced it from third spot.

The position at the top of the first division, with a quarter of the games over is Wolverhampton Wanderers 19 points, Everton 17, Tottenham Hotspur and Burnley, each 15. All have played 11 matches.

Wolverhampton, with five teenagers in the lineup, is setting a brisk pace. A goal 10 minutes from the end by right-winger Terry Wharton gave Wanderers a 3-2 home victory over Liverpool, after the Lancashire side had twice hit back to equalize.

But Everton kept on Wolverhampton's heels with a 4-3 home win over West Bromwich Albion.

Burnley is recovering splendidly after an indifferent start. A goal in each half left them 2-0 victors over Blackpool.

Flagging champions Ipswich Town went down 4-2 at Aston Villa.

Huddersfield Town, though held to a 1-1 draw at Plymouth, took a one-point lead in the second division with 14 points from 11 games.

Walk Don't Wink!

LONDON (UPI)—Transport Minister Marples told Britons yesterday to walk to work if necessary Wednesday when a nation-wide rail strike is threatened.

And if they are in cars, he said, they should "keep an eye out not for beauty, but for the elderly and needy."

"Many motorists, I am afraid, look out for pretty girls," he said.

Can't Save Them All

A Chamber of Commerce committee has decided it would be impractical to save an historic Spanish house from the march of progress.

The chamber's preservation of historic buildings committee considered Friday what should be done if the present owner decides to tear down Cloverdale House at 3498 Lovat, built around 1880 by Dr. William Fraser Tolmie, where his son, Simon, a B.C. premier was born.

Owner A. L. Miller last night would not discuss his plans for the house and said only he has had difficulty getting its history publicized.

The house was divided into suites during the Second World War years and the committee felt this had impaired the historical value of its interior.

Besides, its location was felt to be too outlying for its conversion into a museum or some similar scheme which would make preservation of the house economically feasible.

There are too many old houses for them all to be preserved it was felt.

The committee also decided to recommend to the city that three hitching posts, discovered this summer by the University Women's Club of Victoria, get concrete foundations.

All three were associated with historic Victoria houses and the committee thought the city might eventually put plaques on them giving their history. It was also felt other such posts should be sought out.

A Texas photographer was the gold medalist in the Victoria Camera Club's 19th annual international salon of photography and color exhibition, judges announced yesterday.

Winner of the coveted Vancouver Island Chapter, Photography Society of America gold medal for his black and white ballet study entitled Jete was Joe Hendrick of Dallas. Judges expect to name today the Photography Society of America gold medal winner in the color slide section.

WORLDWIDE
 This year's competition attracted 2,300 color slides and prints from more than a score of countries, including Australia, Germany, Japan, China, Indonesia, Malaysia, India, Italy, Austria, New Zealand, Mexico and Venezuela.

Not more than 200 prints, out of 550 entered, have been selected for exhibition at the Art Gallery from Oct. 21 to Nov. 3.

ONE FOR SALON
 Only one Victoria entry managed to pass the keen scrutiny of the judges and qualify for the salon—a print of a wood carving by Tom Haynes, 2815 Parkview Drive.

Thunderbird crest awards were made to 10 entries in each category.

TWO QUALIFIED
 The entry list included 964 nature slides and 1,336 pictorial color slides. Two local photographers who qualified for salon showing of their color transparencies are Samuel Marling and Frank Boas.

Slides selected for showing will be screened at the Memorial Hall Oct. 18 and at Victoria College auditorium Nov. 2.

Print judges were James McVie and Irvine Dawson of

In Germany Canadian Books At Exhibit

MONTREAL (CPI)—Some of the best in Canadian writing will be on display in Germany this fall.

Four hundred books, English and French, have been chosen as Canada's first entry in the Frankfurt Book Fair.

The fair has been held annually since 1949 in Frankfurt which calls itself "the show window of the book trade."

SHOW VARIETY
 Canada's entries were chosen to demonstrate the character and variety of Canadian writing, by Montreal bookseller H. E. Heinemann and National Librarian W. Kaye Lamb.

In the non-fiction section, emphasis is on Canadian history. The books deal with more or less specialized fields and include such works as Robert Rumilly's History of the Province of Quebec.

There are no scientific books of a technical nature, Mr. Heinemann said, because Canadian scientists usually have a hard time getting their work published here and take it to Britain or elsewhere.

"WE HAVE HIM"
 In fiction, "name the author and we've included him," Mr. Heinemann said. Hugh MacLennan and Roderick Haig-Brown are among the English-language writers included. Jean Jacques Simard and Yves Theriault are two representatives of the French group.

After the Frankfurt Fair, Sept. 20-23, the books will be shown in Berlin, then will be donated to German universities. The exhibit is sponsored by the Canadian Book Publishers' Association.

Hitchhiker Startles Car Driver

JOHANNESBURG (AP)—

Kees tried to hitch a lift but the motorist drove on, and later told hotel owner Andries Wijnhardt why he didn't stop. Wijnhardt explained he had "tamed" Kees and kept him until he became a substance, then set him free 10 miles out of town.

The shaken motorist said he saw Kees standing at the edge of the road with his hairy arm raised.

Kees is a large baboon.

MONTREAL (CPI)—Chief Judge Roland Paquette of Municipal Court angrily threatened

Friday to prosecute store managers who persecute shoplifters. He was judging the case of a 21-year-old mother who pleaded guilty to stealing $13 worth of children's clothing from Kiddy City, Inc.

The woman testified that the manager of the store told her he would let her go free if she paid $20 over and above the cost of the stolen articles.

"I couldn't pay, so he had me arrested," she said.

She said she was destitute since her husband's desertion 10 months previously and she needed winter clothing for her three-year-old son.

Milton Potash, owner of the store, confirmed that his store manager had demanded the extra money to recover the bonus paid to employees who catch people stealing.

"He was just trying to do his job well," said Mr. Potash.

"He was trying to do it too well," replied Chief Judge Paquette grimly.

"I'd strongly advise you to inform your manager that his action is nothing less than extortion and that he lays himself open to prosecution."

Only Barrels, Grapes Make Good Red Wine

By JURGEN HESSE

He worked his arms up to his elbows into the barrel, pushing the grape pulp down into the fragrant juice, and when he brought his arms out again, they glistened in a deep red. And the smile on his lips showed a happy anticipation for countless glasses filled with strong, ruby-red, home-made wine.

"Listen," he said. "Listen to the wine working."

One of Hundreds

Milko Jadresko, 34, of 120 Dallas, is one of hundreds of immigrants to Victoria who make their own red grape wine every year.

Again and again, the Yugoslav pushed the pulp down into the grape juice with his bare arms. He keeps the barrel in an old shed behind his home.

"If I don't do this every day," he said, "the wine goes sour. The pulp comes to top of barrel and go dry so I push him down into the juice."

Nod Approval

While he talked, the door of the tool shed opened and two men came in. They silently walked over to the barrel, looked at the blood-red pulp and nodded their approval.

"Dis make fine wine, Milko," one said.

"Yes, no give headache, you know," Milko amplified. The two Italians were neighbors and wine makers themselves.

"Johnny, bring bottle of wine from last year," Mr. Jadresko shouted.

"Okay," Johnny Infant, of 120 1/2 Dallas, said.

Barrels, Grapes

"What do you use to make wine," we asked Milko.

"Two barrels and lota grapes," he said. "That's all you need."

"I pay $125 for 1,000 pounds of grapes. This make perhaps 45 gallons of wine. If I buy wine from liquor store, it cost me double, but my wine three times better. It has 15 to 16 per cent alcohol."

Mr. Jadresko was born on a Dalmatian island off the Yugoslav coast. When he became a professional waiter the art of making wine was a required subject.

'Part of Life'

Mr. Jadresko believes up to 90 per cent of all Yugoslav and Italian immigrants in Victoria make their own red wine.

"We like wine all the time. It's part of our life," he said.

"Wine need lota air," he explained, leaving the barrel partly uncovered.

In the kitchen, Johnny Infant poured dark red wine into three glasses.

Three Toasts

"Nazdarovye," said Milko in his native Croat.

"Salute," said Johnny in Italian.

"Prost," we said in German. Meanwhile, Milko's wife Maria put 10-month-old son Daniel to bed while daughters Nives, 6, and Janette, 3, romped around the kitchen.

Milko barked something in Croat and the girls disappeared, giggling.

"We always speak Croat at home," he said.

Ottawa Unsettled On Budget Timing

By KEN KELLY
OTTAWA (CP) — The government seems to be of two minds about setting a date for presenting Parliament with its new budget.

Arguments are still going on behind the scenes, on the one hand favoring a budget speech within the next few weeks and on the other hand advocating a wait until early in the new year.

Grenfell Painted Bleak Pictures —And Got Results

By ERNEST MARSHALL HOWSE

Dr. Grenfell of Labrador in his early days once bought a tiny steamer to provide him with transportation in the rough northern seas.

The word "steamer" is technically correct because the little boat of that past era had an engine operated by steam. But it was a small boat meant to stay in inland waters, not to navigate the Labrador Coast and certainly not to make trans-Atlantic crossings.

People with a knowledge of seamanship told Dr. Grenfell that he had made a mistake. They assured him that he would not be able to hire sailors to risk their lives crossing the ocean on a steamer which, with a cargo of coal, would have only 13 tons. Grenfell replied, "I know that I cannot hire seamen. I will ask for volunteers."

So he did. He made public the need, picturing the task as in fact more dangerous than it was. And his strategy worked.

Had he attempted to hire sailors he would have run into trouble. But when he announced that if anyone wished to make the venture for no wages but their passage back, sufficient sailors volunteered to take half a dozen boats across the Atlantic.

Challenged People

Through his long and distinguished years of service in Labrador, Dr. Grenfell used that strategy time and again. He did not picture a job as safer than it was, but as more dangerous than it was. He told men that they probably couldn't do the job, but that he was willing to let them try. The method worked with women as well as men. Once he wanted some nurses. He went to one of the most modern hospitals in the United States wondering how he could get some of the nurses there to leave their jobs and work on the Labrador Coast for no wages. He decided that he would tell this story:

In the spring before he left Labrador, a telegram came from a pace 80 miles distance, asking for him to come at once as there was an outbreak of a fatal type of influenza. He could not leave his hospital. One of his nurses offered to make the attempt, and set out with some helpers and a team of dog sleds.

A fortnight later she sent an urgent telegram asking for help. One of the fishermen, delicious with a high fever, had escaped from his cottage, and had ripped open his stomach.

Epic Story of Nurse

It was spring, and the rivers were breaking up. Dog teams could not travel, and the sea was so jammed with ice no one could make the journey by boat. Grenfell could do no more than wire the nurse to carry on, and do her best.

He learned afterwards what had happened. The nurse had called in a priest who happened to be present, and who had never before seen an operation. She told him how to give the patient the anesthetic.

And then she, although in her turn she had never performed an operation, washed out the abdominal cavity, using buckets of boiled water; and, having rearranged the insides as best she could, sewed up the wound to prevent infection.

Astonishingly enough she did the job perfectly. The man recovered and went on fishing again for the support of his family.

Dr. Grenfell says that when he had finished telling the story half the nurses in the hospital wanted to go to Labrador on the next boat.

'Wops' Badge of Honor

Dr. Grenfell needed other helpers besides doctors and nurses. He built hospitals, orphanages, docks, dug drains, put in water systems, and navigated his boats through the north of Newfoundland and Labrador. Much of the work was done by "wops."

"Wop" in its general use is a reprehensible term; but in Grenfell's service it was a badge of honor. It was the name the public used for all sorts of people Grenfell challenged to come down and work for him at their own expense.

They came from every rank of society, sons and daughters of millionaires; and people who had saved up money in comfortable jobs that they might finally go to a desperately hard job, and work without pay.

During his course of service Grenfell put through the mill 1,400 of these "wops." And he turned down twice the number he accepted.

"If I had asked them in the ordinary way for a contribution of $10,000," said Grenfell, "they would probably have said that they were overwhelmed with calls. But they responded to the challenge of something that really cost."

Grenfell's experience, like James Robinson's in his Operation Crossroads in Africa today, reminds us that, often the leaders of the world, religious as well as political, fail not because their demands are pitched too high for human response, but because they are pitched too low for human inspiration.

Victoria Engineer Gains World Audience

Shell Roof Pioneer To Address Parley

A Victoria engineer who built the first shell structure roofs in the Western hemisphere will deliver a paper on the subject to an international building conference to be held October 1-4 at the University of California.

Peter M. Gelsh, an engineer with the bridge office, Department of Highways, will read his paper entitled "Timber Thin Shell Roofs and Their Static and Dynamic Design" at the opening session of the conference, expected to attract 1,000 engineers and architects from 25 countries.

STRONG, LIGHT

Shell structure design calls for thin, curved slabs which provide maximum strength with light weight.

The principle has found wide acceptance in reinforced concrete and timber roof structures, including domes, and in construction of thin-walled tanks, boilers and vessels.

MULTI-PURPOSE

This shell-type roof is used to cover large areas and are used with great success in such structures as aircraft hangars, exhibition pavilions, churches, arenas, supermarkets, factories and gymnasiums.

Mr. Gelsh, who designed the first timber thin shell roofs in America, which were built in 1946 for the Industrial Fair in Buenos Aires, said the structures have received little attention from Canadian builders.

TOO COSTLY?

"There is an opinion in the Canadian building industry that the use of shells is too costly," said Mr. Gelsh.

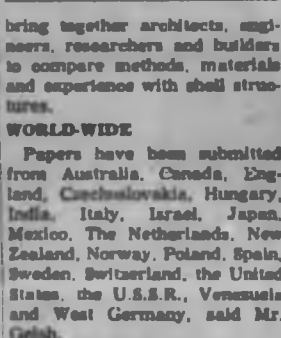

U.S. builders had shared this belief, until they compared their soaring labor bill with the actual construction costs of shell structures.

COMPARING NOTES

The conference at the University of California, conducted by the Building Research Advisory Board, the National Academy of Sciences, the National Research Council and the International Association for Shell Structures, is designed to

New Carrier 'Revolutionary'

LONDON (CP)—A new breed of aircraft carrier with greater strategic punch and wider versatility is being planned by Royal Navy designers.

For the first time in more than 20 years the designers have been given the chance to plan a carrier from the keel up. The result is likely to be revolutionary.

The flight deck will probably be radically altered. Among the 50 layouts now being considered are plans for island and funnels aft; angle decks to port and starboard and abolition of the island with funnels out of the sides of the ship.

The designers want to ensure the carriers will be able to operate not only with the planes of the immediate future but with the type of aircraft likely to evolve during the ship's life.

Recent experiments have also introduced a new type of steel. It has greater notch durability—a term used by naval constructors to describe the quality that prevents it from cracking under shock.

Sooke Houses' Numbers Up

Residents of Sooke had their houses numbered for the first time yesterday when volunteer firemen got together to do the job that government and private enterprise had delayed for four years.

A committee was set up in 1936 when a bylaw to have houses numbered was passed, but the job, estimated at between $1,500 and $2,000, was not done. The problem of figuring out a numbering system and applying it was continually put off until this year.

Then the provincial government, in conjunction with the post office, got together with the capital region planning board and figured out a simple numbering system for the 600-house community.

Yesterday the final phase of the project was completed as the 22 members of the Sooke volunteer fire department got together with hammers, nails and numbers to finish the job at a total cost of about one-quarter of the original estimate.

Chips Fell —And So Did Title

GLASGOW (AP) — A six-foot Scotman has laid claim to the salted potato chips eating championship of the world. Richard McLeod, 20, ate 30 bags of the crisp delicacy—a total of 75 ounces—in 54 minutes.

Previous claimant of the title was Bob Steele, a miner in Northumberland, whose mark was 28 packets in 62 minutes in 1956.

Age Bias Cuts Productive Life

By CLAUDE COX NEW YORK (UPI) — The working life of the average American has been telescoped to a point where he is likely to have only 15 good, productive years between the completion of his education and being regarded as "too old" for advancement, a sociologist claims.

LOREN OUT

Sociologist Dr. Jeme J. Frankel said in an interview that it is becoming increasingly apparent that the man over 40 loses out in the competition for success and prestige.

"The peak period of earning power is now telescoped from both ends," he said. "The number of years of education now considered necessary in this technological age is rapidly increasing and many more young people will be going to college."

SHORT GAP

"A young man may therefore not complete his education till the age of 22, or even 24 or 25, if he needs further professional or scientific training."

"At the other end, he may begin to encounter discrimination against himself around the age of 40 if he should have to look for a new job."

"He must therefore compress all his progress into approximately 15 years, instead of being able to look forward, as young men once could, to a lifetime of achievement. Our future, as it has been said, is no longer what it used to be."

DISSENTING

Frankel regards this as a disturbing situation, because, as far as he is concerned, the classification of middle-aged men as "too old" has all but vanished. This means, he said, that an unemployed man over 40 now is classified "older."

Even the now widely accepted retirement age of 65 should be outlawed, in Frankel's estimation. He feels that a person should be allowed to work as long as he is able to contribute something and wants to work.

Screaming Dentist Cleared

LONDON (Reuters) — A British dentist who screamed back at a screaming six-year-old girl patient has been cleared by the General Dental Council. It was learned Saturday.

The girl's mother, who complained to the council, said the dentist's screaming "made my daughter cry even more."

The Medical Defence Union, which took up the unidentified dentist's case, said the dentist admitted his screaming "was quite horrible," but said it was remarkably effective in reducing the patient to "a non-complaining silence."

Chiropractor Raps Doctors

VANCOUVER (CP)—W. O. Morgan, president of the Canadian Chiropractic Association, Saturday accused the medical profession of attempting to stall government-sponsored health care. The doctors are attempting to do this by doing everything possible to get enrollment in pre-paid medical care programs, he told the B.C. Chiropractic Association.

Labor Boss Set To Inspire Dockers' Talks

Fiery labor leader Harry Bridges is expected to breathe new life into contract negotiations involving more than 1,000 Vancouver Island longshoremen when he speaks to union members here today.

'Ladies'

Stage Start Great

By BERT BINNY

The Victoria Theatre Guild provided a promising opening to their 1962-63 season last night with the first presentation of Denham and Percy's Ladies in Retirement.

Ladies in Retirement is an excellently written and constructed play; it carries the audience along effortlessly and never allows interest to flag.

GREAT HEIGHTS

Helen Peaker played, the lead part of Ellen with consistent competence and rose to very great heights in the final act.

Margaret Martin was excellent as Leonora and the two sisters, played by Margaret Johnston and Elizabeth Mayne, gave similarly top-notch performances.

NOT HEAVY

Robert Cooke as Albert turned in a deft piece of characterization and was particularly to be commended in that he avoided becoming "heavy" despite constant temptation.

Doreen Rees could perhaps have put just a little more feeling into the part of Sister Theresa; she could have been less matter of fact without being machinate.

UPN AND DOWNN

Vera Friedrich's Lucy had its ups and downs; there were times when she lacked even the impressiveness her smaller part still required.

The play was excellently set and very well lit. Allan Purdy's direction was sensitive and usually technically faultless. The play runs every evening through Oct. 8 and is well worth taking in.

Mr. Bridges, who has headed the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union since the 1930s, is making a coast-wide tour of ILWU locals.

He spoke to members of the Prince Rupert local yesterday, and his schedule today calls for talks at Port Alberni, Chemainus and Victoria.

The Australian-born union leader from San Francisco has led the ILWU and its 3,000 Canadian, 57,000 American members through some of the toughest union wars in the history of the labor movement.

BECAME TARGET

Bridges himself became the target of senate investigating committees and for years was unable to leave the United States because the immigration department planned to lock the gates behind him.

MEET TODAY

Bridges will be met here today by Stan Ball, president of Victoria local 504; Leo Leblinsky of New Westminster, president of the Canadian area of the union; and Roy Smith, an official of the coast committee.

ADDED MUSCLE

He is expected to provide the added muscle in the contract negotiations which are rapidly drifting toward conclusion.

The present master contract with the Shipping Federation of B.C. expired Aug. 1.

NEKKO CLAUDE

Ray Seymour, secretary of Local 504, said the union is seeking a "mechanization" clause included in the master agreement "so men won't be replaced by machines."

He said a minor wage increase is also sought.

City Soldier Marksman

Best marksman in the 5,000-man United Nations Emergency Force at Khan Yunis, Egypt, is Staff Sergeant Bert Walker, of Victoria and Wainwright, Alta.

A member of the Royal Canadian Electrical and Mechanical Engineers, Staff Sergeant Walker scored 74 out of a possible 75 points, to tie Lance Corporal H. Singh of India. In a subsequent sudden death match the Canadian won.

Church Takes Form

St. James' new Anglican parish church in a beautiful forest setting on Departure Bay Road, Nanaimo, is scheduled to be completed early in the new year. Photograph shows laminated wood beams of the structure, which is being built largely by volunteer labor. The church's preacher will be Rev. G. H. Greenhaigh, head of the Anglican diocese in the area. (June Leahy.)

Colonist Clarifies Report Made by Union Leader

On Sept. 28 this newspaper published a statement made by Mr. E. P. O'Neal, secretary of the B.C. Federation of Labor. Mr. O'Neal made a statement to one of our reporters in reference to the application of MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Co. for permission to prosecute the IWA local at Port Alberni.

It has been suggested that the statement made by Mr. O'Neal conveys the inference that MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Co. or its officers have done something illegal or have been guilty of reprehensible conduct.

It is clear from the article in question that the reporter merely quoted what was stated by Mr. O'Neal. This newspaper sincerely regrets any misunderstanding caused to MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Co. and its officers.

Austerity Cause?

Prices Rising Wives Agree

Greater Victoria housewives last night agreed that food prices have risen since the federal austerity campaign began June 24, but they didn't seem very worried about it.

Food retailers, however, were more positive.

ALMOST ALL UP

Lawrence Westendale, president of Independent Merchants' Co-operative Association of Victoria, a group of small food stores, said almost all food items have risen.

"Especially all food coming from outside," he said, "like fruit juice from the States."

ON BANDWAGON

"If there is a general price rise everyone wants to get on the bandwagon."

Biggest jump in food costs appears to be in meat. Norman Peck, 238-A Stormont, who owns a butcher shop on north Douglas near the Fountain Circle, said prices are still rising.

DOLLAR BLAMED

Mr. Peck said that since the austerity campaign began, beef prices have risen about 30 to 40 cents a pound for customers and pork has jumped about 20 cents a pound.

He said devaluation of the Canadian dollar had given United States meat buyers an advantage and Canadian buyers a disadvantage.

Kinsmen Fair Ends In Blaze of Glory

Murphy Expects Voters' Support For Golf Course

Reeve Stanley Murphy said last night he expects "tremendous support" on a referendum which will be put to the voters next month for permission to develop the only municipally-operated golf course on Vancouver Island.

The corporation of Saanich hopes to build a nine-hole golf course on city-owned property at Beaver Lake, which it is arranging to lease for $1 per year for 20 years, with a renewable option for 10 additional years.

22,000 ELIGIBLE

Some 22,000 voters will be eligible to decide the issue, in a referendum whose date will be set during Monday's council meeting.

Any profit from the operation would be used for further development of the course or for development of recreational facilities in the area.

The property comprises about 70 acres worth an estimated $250,000. The city's willingness to lease such a valuable property to Saanich for only $1 per year "is an illustration of Victoria's willingness to deal with area problems," said Reeve Murphy.

The course, planned by A. Vernon Macdonald, would cost about $185,000 to develop. Officials hope to turn it into an 18-hole course within two years.

Kiwanis Project

Cash Holds Key To Villa Plans

Whether the $125,000 final stage of the Kiwanis Village home for the aged gets built in 1963 depends on whether enough money can be raised before then, the treasurer of the Kiwanis Village Society said last night.

Drummond Taylor said Kiwanis Club members are pinning their hopes on the sale of Kiwanis centennial dollars and the annual door-to-door porch light blitz campaign in December.

How much money was raised from centennial dollars should be known around the end of October, he said.

He said the addition is planned to include 25 bedrooms, an auditorium-chapel, a proper dining room and a new kitchen. Portions of the villa already constructed include 50 bedrooms and two lounges, one of which now is used as a dining room.

It is "by no means certain" the addition will go up next year, he said.

By HARVEY SHEPHERD
Crowds swarmed, pushed and jammed the Kinsmen Fall Fair last night to end it in a flood of gold and leaving Kinsmen deliriously happy and promising better things next year.

From 4:30 p.m. till the last hot dog was swallowed it was go, go, go. "We understand we've got western Canada's biggest fall fair on our first try," said fair chairman and co-ordinator Jack Philson.

There was scarcely a place among the indoor exhibits or in the midway where you could walk 20 feet in a fast, straight line last night.

And the crowds in front of entertainers Dick Contino and Baron Bulka were unbelievable.

The Baron, who was almost completely immobilized Friday with a serious ulcer attack, put extra oomph into his violin virtuosity, acrobatics and clowning last night which had the audience shoulder-to-shoulder two-thirds of the way down the curling rink.

"It's a tremendous experience," said Ken Kopelow, Vancouver booking agent, viewing the teeming rink floor. "The word'll be getting around Hollywood that this is a good place to play. One of the best."

Mrs. Gladys Venables of 392 Falkland was winner of a 10-day trip for two to Hawaii, given as a draw prize by the Greater Victoria Retarded Children's Association.

Judged best exhibit at the show was Eaton's display of hearing aids and organs.

Dispute at Yarrow

Up to Grievance Committee

Court Parade

Theft, Not Violence

An 18-year-old former sailor, who was found not guilty of robbery with violence, was found guilty of theft of articles valued at less than $50.

He was Donald G. Tucker, involved in the theft were a wrist watch and a $5 bill.

Tucker denied the original charge of robbery with violence involving a Kitimat man, James Rowley, but Magistrate William Ostler found him guilty of theft.

As no evidence was tendered by city prosecutor as to the value of the watch, Mr. Ostler said he would find Tucker guilty of theft under $50.

NIX MONSTER

Tucker was released on a $250 bond to be of good behavior for six months.

Clifford Hobbs, 798 Suffolk, was fined $250 for impaired driving and $100 each on two charges of failing to remain at the scene of accidents on Douglas Street and Johnson Street Bridge.

Edward McCallough, HMCS Naden, was fined $300 for failing to remain at the scene of an accident on Quadra Street.

An official of the electricians' union refused to comment yesterday on a statement by Yarrow's Ltd. general manager John Wallace that two work stoppages staged earlier this week by union electricians were "illegal."

"The matter has gone to the grievance committee and I won't have any comment until the matter is dealt with there," said J. A. Driscoll, business agent of Local 230, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

He said the grievance procedure should be completed in a week.

Earlier, Mr. Wallace said his company was being used as a "pawn" in a long-standing battle between the union and HMC Dockyard.

Two half-hour work stoppages last week resulted when non-union electricians from Shop 22 at the Dockyard were sent to do some work on the destroyer escort Saskatchewan.

In protest, the union electricians refused to work.

Specialized Work

"In our opinion the work stoppage was illegal," said Mr. Wallace. He said only company and sub-contracted work required union men.

"There was no sub-contract to the Dockyard... this was specialized work."

"We are in strict disagreement with the union on this. We feel it is obvious that on warships they will have specialized work to carry out from time to time, and that is why men are sent from the Dockyard."

"We are certainly not going to impede them."

Mr. Wallace said there had been previous protests from union men over similar situations but "we have no control over this situation whatever."

"Yarrow is being made a pawn in a long-standing difficulty between the union and the Dockyard. We have to recognize government institutions are non-union."

"At this time the unions and management should avoid petty things, when the whole country is concerned with productivity," said Mr. Wallace.

Rights Probe

Indians Laud Check

Ed Underwood, chief of the East Saanich Indian band, said last night a move by MP Frank Howard (NDP, Skeena) to check the Bill of Rights against the Indian Act was the "best thing that could happen" to Canada's Indian population.

Mr. Howard's private bill is scheduled to come up for first reading Monday.

UNDER SCRUTINY

It is designed to bring the Indian Act under scrutiny by the justice department, as required by the Bill of Rights.

Under the Bill of Rights, all new legislation must be scrutinized to make sure it complies with the Bill's provisions about fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadians.

LOT LOSING

"There are a lot of rights that we should have—and a lot that we are losing," said Chief Underwood.

He said that Indian rights and privileges—especially those pertaining to hunting and fishing—were being "gradually" destroyed.

COULD HAPPEN

"The best thing that could happen would be for them to look into our Indian rights . . . and there are a lot of things in the Indian Act that should be removed," said Chief Underwood.

Island Cadets Enrolled

Eight Vancouver Island high school graduates are among the 220 from across Canada who have been enrolled as Canadian Army officer cadets.

They are W. H. Braden, J. R. Green, J. W. Carpenter, N. K. Gillespie and I. G. P. Martin, all of Victoria; W. A. Ferguson of Cumberland; D. A. Grice of Comox and B. W. Silpe of Duncan.

COLLEGE MILITAIRE

Of the group of 220, a total of 23 will attend Royal Military College, Kingston, 46 will go to Royal Roads and 66 will attend the College Militaire at St. Jean, Que.

The remaining 85 will go to approved universities of their choice.

Tally-Ho Is All Right But Not 'Bally-Hoo'

Virulent opponents of Causeway commercialization will get mild support from the average Victoria resident, if a random Colonist survey is any indication.

But they should not expect him to take to the barricades to halt the sightseeing bus. A significant minority of those phoned up last night by a Colonist reporter felt the Causeway is just the place where sightseeing buses ought to park to cop the tourist's dollar for Victoria pockets.

A couple of people—in contrast to a more widespread nostalgia for older, quieter days in Victoria—rather like the hustle and bustle which characterized the Empress Hotel-Parliament Buildings area this year.

Some thought the Tally-Ho is a tourist attraction which lends distinctiveness to Victoria. Others thought they were out of place.

Two members of the majority who do feel the Causeway is too commercialized volunteered the impression what is happening to Victoria is symbolized by the Empress Hotel's finding it necessary to put up a big sign telling people that's what it is.

What prompted the informal Colonist survey was the writing of a letter to Victoria city council last week by the Native

Sons of B.C., Post Number One, objecting to commercialization of the Causeway.

The letter said despite the beauty of the legislative buildings and of the Empress Hotel, the area is rapidly losing aesthetic appeal. The letter objected to Tally-Ho, sightseeing buses and commercial vending trucks which, it complained, obstructed the view of the Inner Harbor.

H. V. Wymore, 903 Quebec, said he "somewhat agrees" with the Sons' stand. "I'm not against these activities. We need them in the tourist season. But I'd like to see them based, not on the Causeway or in front of the Parliament Buildings, but, say, a block away."

Miss M. W. Sedgley of 431 Heather, a longtime resident, said: "I don't mind the Tally-

Ho but we don't need all the bally-hoo. I liked Victoria as it used to be."

But the sightseeing bus operators "are making a living and aren't bothering anybody," according to Mrs. M. G. Newberry of 408 Parry.

S. R. Hinde of 423 Parry thought sightseeing buses on the Causeway this year about reached the "saturation point. If we get any more we'll be just another American city instead of the quiet little burgh we like so much."

He said the buses likely hamper tourists trying to take pictures of the Empress Hotel from across the street.

"I only know what I like to see," said Miss D. H. Neal of 1702 Quadra. "I didn't mind it when there was only one but I think all this is rather too much."

Checking to make sure job is done right is Norman Lee, top, of 764 Princess, who watches Bob Clarke, of 3318 Calumet, make final adjustment on seat belt.

Scores Line Up For Seat Belts

A Victoria doctor bought two seat belts for his car yesterday because "I have treated too many people who were slashed up in car accidents solely because they were not using them."

Dr. W. Billung-Myer, who is an intern at St. Joseph's emergency ward, was one of the more than 100 people who had seat belts installed in their cars yesterday by three car clubs working together at the vacant Fyfe Cleaners lot on Douglas Street. More than 100 belts were sold by the Mystics, Roadsters and Quarter-Miler car clubs, who also installed many belts which had been purchased elsewhere.

Many people who have been putting off buying the belts are taking advantage of the car clubs' free installation of belts.

Mrs. K. McKenzie, of 555 Broadway, who bought five belts, one for each member of her family, said she has been planning to buy them for some time, but the free installation offer made it a lot easier.

CLOSE CALLS Mrs. Beverly Phillips, of 2814 Inlet, is having the belts installed because she and her husband have had a few close calls in their car, and this makes the odds a little bit more in their favor.

The clubs will repeat the offer today and every weekend until the demand falls off, a club spokesman said yesterday.

In the event of rain, the installations will be done at Mooney's Body Shop, 937 View Street.

Art Loan Monday A picture loan will be held Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the Greater Victoria Art Gallery at which several new pictures will be on view and available for rental.

LOT OF LAND "There's a lot of land on the east side of Douglas ripe for development. Once the traffic pattern is established at the Mayfair shopping centre, this will be valuable property."

MORE GOING UP Capital Region Planning Board director J. Murray Roberts said: "There will be more commercial development going up in that area, but it will tend to be the drive-in type of commerce."

RAMBLING ACTS To remain picturesque in the face of stiff competition from the shopping centres the downtown area must provide easier access to the heart of the city, more parking space and pedestrian malls, he said.

Choice for Saanich:

Build Municipal Hall Or Merge with City

Working conditions are "unspeakable" at the old Saanich municipal hall at Royal Oak, Coun. Robert Chard charged last night.

"It's perfectly obvious the conditions under which the staff is working are hopeless. I went through the building the other day and saw a mailing machine working behind a furnace in the basement."

Saanich has reached the point where it must either build a new municipal hall or amalgamate with Victoria and use the facilities of the proposed city hall expansion, he said.

At the head of the list of major problems facing Saanich council this fall is the question of amalgamation, said the councillor.

"Saanich cannot make any fundamental decisions until that is decided," he said, adding: "It would be foolish to spend $500,000 on a municipal hall when amalgamation could be an established fact within a couple of years."

'Downtown' Soon At Saanich Line

By JACK FREY

Greater Victoria shoppers in a few years' time will call the city-Saanich boundary on Douglas the "downtown" commercial district, a Saanich councillor predicted yesterday.

Coun. Gregory Cook said he thought downtown businesses will move to the fringes of the large Mayfair shopping centre under construction just south of the Saanich boundary at Douglas and Tolmie.

MAJOR AREA

Two community planners agreed the mile-long stretch of land east of Douglas between the Town-and-Country shopping centre and the Mayfair shopping centre will become a major commercial area, but felt there was no immediate danger of city merchants suffering because of it.

Coun. Cook said the northward movement of business started with the shift of Victoria to Vancouver ferry services from Inner Harbor to Swartz Bay, turning the Patricia Bay and Trans-Canada Highway intersection into a major route.

Property in the vicinity of the Patricia Bay and Trans-Canada Highway intersection is now a natural location for commercial development, he said.

PARKING BAN

Ironically, the promise of healthy commercial growth near North Douglas comes at a time when numerous Saanich-city merchants are faced with lack of customers because of a parking ban imposed in connection with the recent Douglas Street beautification project.

HANDFUL OF BLOCKS

Douglas Street, it seems, will not become another Kingsway, and the land of plenty will be just east of Douglas in a handful of blocks linking the Town-and-Country and Mayfair shopping centres.

Saanich municipal planner Anthony Parr said he has no doubt the two centres will be linked with stores.

LOT OF LAND

"There's a lot of land on the east side of Douglas ripe for development. Once the traffic pattern is established at the Mayfair shopping centre, this will be valuable property."

MORE GOING UP

Capital Region Planning Board director J. Murray Roberts said: "There will be more commercial development going up in that area, but it will tend to be the drive-in type of commerce."

RAMBLING ACTS

To remain picturesque in the face of stiff competition from the shopping centres the downtown area must provide easier access to the heart of the city, more parking space and pedestrian malls, he said.

Conditions are so bad at the municipal hall that, if amalgamation is defeated at the polls in the December referendum, council "should go ahead immediately with its new hall."

OTHER PROBLEMS

Other problems which he said must be faced by council:

● Major park acquisition, including the Moore property on Gordon Point—the last remaining waterfront acreage between Cadboro Bay and Cordova Bay—and the McRae estate, including the Cedar Hill Golf Course, where there is room for a stadium and a first-class integrated recreation centre for the whole of Greater Victoria.

● Council should see fit to allocate more money each year for major roads, with top priority being given to development of Mackenzie Avenue and other east-west roads.

● The water program should be accelerated, especially the replacement of semi-obsolete two-inch pipe which will take 15 years at the present rate of replacement.

THAT'S TOO BAD

Coun. Chard is up for reelection in December. Asked whether he feared he might lose his council seat for advocating measures which might boost the tax burden, he said: "If I get defeated telling the people what I think, that's too bad."

'An Interesting Fellow'

By DON GAIN

"Master Gunner of St. James' Park," General Sir Robert Mansergh, GCB, KBE, MC, made an impressive entrance to Victoria yesterday, bearing messages from the Queen.

"Our Captain General who is, of course, Her Majesty The Queen, instructed me before I left, to inform you she takes a very great interest in you. She further instructed me to give you her good wishes and she said she was pleased with the close tie-up between the gunners of Britain and the gunners of Canada."

The general told units of the 5th (B.C.) Independent Medium Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery, following the inspection yesterday afternoon at Bay Street Armoury.

The tall, dignified general

showed his soldierly bearing in a public inspection and then displayed his warmth in his talk to the men.

He lauded them for the time and effort they put into their training on their own time.

"Your wives and mothers

contribute, too," he said. "They make a contribution through every man on the parade ground."

His message for the future was to go out to meet it. "Look ahead," he said. "Go to the moon if you like, but take the tradition of the Royal Regiment along with you."

Sir Robert told of visiting Canadian gunners in Germany. "I was due somewhere else at three o'clock. At 5:30 I was still with them," he said.

And that is the way it was yesterday. He spent over an hour with the young cadet gunners in their mess.

"The general told me the parade was very good," said cadet James Cox, Jr., 15, of 1207 Duke. The cadet's father, Mr. James Cox, has been with the 5th regiment since 1940.

Cadet Rod Kathrens, 19, of 2519 Fernwood, had a talk with the Master Gunner and found him "quite an interesting fellow."

"Not stuffy, very easy to talk to," was the reaction of Robert Lewis, 19, 236 St. Charles.

'We'll Still Have Gunners Firing Rockets, Missiles'

"We will still have gunners," was the reply of the master gunner, General Sir Robert Mansergh, when asked what effect the weapons of the future would have on the role of the gunner.

"We will still have orthodox weapons," he said, "and in the firing of rockets and other missiles there are duties for gunners. I have been visiting units which are using new weapons and I still regard them as gunners."

And there will still be a master gunner," he concluded.

Story was told by Mr. (Anderson) Smith's son, Nels Smith, 528 Goldstream.

Our Soldiers in Skirts

CWAC mermaids on the edge of the Armoury pool are Privates Addy Collins, and Jacqueline Boyd. Brave one first in, is Joanne Guillet. When not swimming, these girls wear the sleek battle-dress of the motor transport platoon, and drive everything from jeeps to 3-ton trucks.

Some women go a-soldiering too, as we know from the fine war-time record of the Canadian Women's Army Corps.

Soldiers in skirts have won themselves a permanent place in Canada's military life—and as shown here they do not hesitate to don battledress when the job demands it.

In peacetime, the work goes on, keeping a nucleus of highly trained personnel in readiness for emergencies.

They perform an important job—from first-aid and motor transport driving, to orderly room and administrative duties.

Official winter training program for recruits, drivers, typists and clerks begins October 2. There are still some recruit vacancies. Training nights are Fridays and Tuesdays from 8 to 10 p.m. in the Bay Street Armoury.

All is not work for the 80 girls of the unit. Periods include swimming in the Armoury pool, rifle shooting, and social functions.

Maj. H. C. P. Green commands 155 Company, and Capt. Doris Chudleigh is his CWAC adviser. Other CWAC officers of the unit are Lieut. Jean Groat (attached to 25 Militia Group headquarters), Lieut. Pat Allwood and 2/Lieut. Diane McBratney.

Drill practice in the Armoury makes for a smart appearance in ceremonial parades, and the CWAC are noted for their trim turnout. Clerical platoon in foreground, with drivers next.

The army cannot function without an orderly-room staff and plenty of paper work. Cpl. Lydia Easton (standing) looks up a sticky point in QR (Army) for Ptes. Evelyn Bean (left), Cpl. Wynn Clearie is typing Part I Orders. Clerical platoon girls are given thorough training in everything from army publications to typing.

Transport girls "hitch a ride" in the back of a truck following driving exercises at Albert Head Camp. Drivers-in-training often become passengers until they reach the Driving Range where they get expert instruction.

Three time decorated Capt. Doris Chudleigh is CWAC adviser to 155 Company. She has five years war service and seven years in CWAC since it was re-formed in 1953.

There are many dead-eye-Janes among the CWAC, and those that aren't yet, soon learn. Ready for rifle practice are L/Cpl. Anne Loutit, Pte. Sandra Ferguson and Pte. Jennie Poulton. Rifles are .303's with 22 bore.

Your Problems

By Ann Landers

Dear Ann Landers: I have just turned 21. For many years I have known that my mother has been cheating on my dad.

Dad admits he has been aware of this for 10 years. He claims he never wanted my brother and me to be hurt so he said nothing and did nothing.

My hurt has been long healed. Mother lost all my love and respect when I first learned of her affair. She is still carrying on with the same man after all these years and find continues to be deaf, dumb and blind.

I think he is a fool to let her get away with this. I've tried to get him to divorce mother and find a decent woman who could give him the happiness he is entitled to but he refuses to listen.

Maybe if he saw your advice he would take it. And perhaps if my mother saw it she would realize what she has done to all of us.—JERRY

Dear Jerry: Neither your dad nor your mother wrote for advice so I have none for them—but I DO have some for you.

Your mother doesn't deserve any good conduct medals, but your behavior is also unspeakable.

There's an outside chance that you don't know all the facts relating to your mother's behavior—or your father's either. So why don't you put away that pitchfork, Sis, and let your parents work out their problems as best they can?

Dear Ann Landers: I am allowing a trivial matter to assume serious proportions and it may wreck my marriage. Please say something to set me on the right track.

Several months ago I married a widow. I was a widow. We've known each other for many years. Everything was fine until I learned he gets part of his mail at his daughter's home.

I can think of no reason for this except a few dividend cheques which he turns over to his children. He has told me about the dividends but they don't amount to much. I have money of my own and I don't need his.

Twice I have suggested he receive ALL his mail at our home, but he continues to use his daughter's mailing address. What shall I do now?—D.W.

Dear D.W.: Now forget it. The first sentence of your letter describes the situation beautifully. Don't cut off your head to cure a headache.

Dear Ann Landers: I've never heard of this problem before and I'll bet you haven't either. I have a very nice girl friend and we get along great together. Whenever I eat at her house I get sick to my stomach. When she eats at my house the same thing happens. When we have lunch together at school I have no trouble. Also, when we eat in a public place I am perfectly fine. It is only when we eat at her house or mine that I get sick. Can you help me?—BARFVILLE

Dear Barfville: I'm sure you've guessed your problem is emotional. Something about your home atmosphere is making you uncomfortable in this girl's presence. It may be that your home is quite different from hers and this difference makes you ill at ease when you are together.

Tell your head to notify your stomach that these differences do not matter.

'So Let's Go Gaily'

By GAY PAULEY
(United From International)
"We all have to go some day. So let's go gaily."

Mrs. Boulart, a busy, breezy woman, is sure up her philosophy of entertaining which has earned her, in the opinion of her group, the title — "The Elsa Maxwell of France."

Cutting their cake at a reception in the Carlton Club are Mr. and Mrs. Terrance Marson, following their marriage in Oak Bay United Church. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Moule, the former Judy Moule. Mr. Marson is the son of Mrs. J. E. Marson and the late Mr. Marson.—(Jus-Rite.)

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth C. Lawson were married in early September in St. Paul's Anglican Church. The bride is the former Nettle Nadia Mitchuk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Mitchuk, Faithful Street. Her husband is the son of Mrs. Neta Lawson, Wellington Avenue.—(Chevrans.)

Says French Hostess

Mrs. Boulart is tall and slim.

We sat down to talk with this volatile woman with residences in Paris and the Bauges section of France.

We asked her the difference in entertaining in France and in this country.

"The French people are not so hospitable," she said. "It is very complicated to get into a French home. Here in America, it is different. Everyone talks up and says, 'Come on over tonight.'"

She continued, "but I will tell you one thing about a party in France. We invite all age groups. Why? This way the older ones can talk to the young... the young learn to listen. How else are the generations to know each other?"

"That is one of your problems in America... you don't mix the ages. The young people don't join the family life. And your young people drink too much!"

BORE HER

Mrs. Boulart is anti-cocoon parties because "they bore me... one big way of paying off obligation. No chance to talk with guests. Unfortunately, they're catching on in Europe also."

She is married to Charles Boulart, whom she met during the Second World War. He fought with France's forces until the country capitulated to the Germans, then he joined the other allied forces.

BAINE ROBAER

The Boularts have gone into raising thoroughbred horses because "I won a runner in a gin rummy game."

Currently, she said, their stables are near Deauville and "our second daughter rides like a jockey." There are three Boulart daughters, ages 18, 17, and 12.

Does France have an unofficial listing of a "four hundred," as the United States has?

"Yes," she said, "it's called the 'hotin mondain,' but as for social standing, I haven't got a bit."

St. Andrew's Cathedral Council, Catholic Women's League, will meet Tuesday, Oct. 2 at 8 p.m. in the parish hall.

Viennese

Honeymoon

Mr. and Mrs. Glen Allen Hale who were married yesterday afternoon in St. Luke's Anglican Church have left by air for Vienna. Following their honeymoon, the couple will reside in Sidney.

Rev. R. O. Wilkes officiated for the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Tom H. Woolson, Foul Bay Road, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Hale, New Dayton, Alta.

The bride, Miss Barbara Jean Woolson, entered the church on the arm of her father as the choir sang, "Immortal, Invisible, God Only Wise."

A crown of orange blossoms from her mother's veil held the bride's hair. She wore a gown of satin brocade was fashioned with a full skirt and overskirt that swept to an elegant train. She carried a cascade bouquet of pink rapture roses and white feather carnations.

Maid of honor, Miss Joan Woolson, sister of the bride, bridesmatron, Mrs. E. J. Moore, and bridesmaids, Miss Ruth Gordon and Miss Lorna Hale, all wore identically styled short dresses of coral crystal charm tulle with small flowers in tone. They carried fans of deeper pink and white carnations.

Norman Hale, brother of the groom, was best man. Ushers were Roy Hale, John Beattie and Weldon Wallace. An all-white three-tier wedding cake decorated with white orchids and roses, centred the bride's table at a reception in Oak Bay Beach Hotel. Dr. O. G. Lucas proposed the toast.

Garden Notes

By M. V. CHESNUT, FRMS

SHRUBS FOR EXPOSED SITE (T.G.W. Methosini)—A very good shrub for your sunny, but windswept, seashore garden is Escallonia (tangley-ensis), with small shiny leaves and tiny tubular pink flowers. Another toughie is Atriplex halimus—not much on flowers, but it has attractive silvery grey foliage and is a sound for punishment, taking even salt sea spray without damage. Atriplex will sometimes be cut down by frost in a very severe winter, but it will regenerate from the roots and bounce back stronger and more vigorous than ever.

We are inclined to think of Privet purely as a hedging plant, but a single specimen of the Golden Privet, allowed to grow naturally, makes a grand splash of color in the garden and can take about anything the weather can dish out. Strictly speaking, Privet isn't an evergreen, but it will often hold its leaves through a mild winter.

YELLOW-FLOWERED PERENNIALS (R.L.M.C.T. Victoria)—Some good yellow and orange-flowered perennials for your daughter to plant in her Perennial garden would be: Anemone, growing from two to three feet tall and blooming from July to September; Doronicum or Leopard's Bane, two to three feet and flowering very early in the spring; Geum, one to two feet, in flower almost all summer long; Kniphofia or Red Hot Poker, two to five feet depending on variety, blooming July to October; Rudbeckia or Coneflower, particularly their fine new hybrids called Gloriosa Daisy, three to five feet, August and September; Golden Rod and Golden Glow, four to six feet, August to September.

All these are reliably winter hardy in the Okanagan.

MONKEY PUZZLE (C.M. Victoria)—The Chilean pine or Monkey Puzzle tree is best propagated from seed, as cuttings from this tree have a tendency to grow lopsided. The seeds are found in the female cones, which are the plump, globular ones. These cones fall apart when the seeds are ripe.

If you have a greenhouse or cold-frame, sow in pots of equal parts sandy loam soil and peat moss, or sow in the fall in protected nursery beds outdoors. Incidentally, the seeds of the Monkey Puzzle are edible. They have a nut-like flavor.

One of the troubles we have with the Christmas Rose is that their chaste white flowers are carried on fairly short stems, and the petals are easily ruined by rain splashing soil into the blossoms. The manure mulch will help some by covering the bare patches of soil between the plants, but if you want to pick the flowers this winter in perfect condition, it is better to cover the plants, using a bottomless wooden box with a sheet of plastic tacked over it, putting it on about the time when the flower buds are showing a little white.

TIGRIDIA CULTURE (C.M.M. Sidney)—I'm afraid your Tigridias are not reliably hardy enough to leave outdoors all winter, although I have known of cases where the bulbs have survived a mild winter in a well drained location. Better take them up in early October, dry them off, and store them in a plastic bag filled with vermiculite in a very cool corner of the basement. The vermiculite should be bone dry.

Tigridias multiply at an unusually prolific rate, and I imagine you will find yourself digging up about three times as many bulbs as you planted last spring.

Check your bulbs from time to time through the winter, and if you find them sprouting too early in the year, move to a cooler place.

ART BUCHWALD Unveils New and Used Models

Name Cars Make News

The new automobile models have just come out and we're happy to report on several of them as to performance and rating.

THE TEDDY CANDIDATE MARK I—The Kennedy Co. has just introduced this model which claims to run on its own steam. But Kennedy engineers have had a lot to say about the design. In primary tests it was successful beyond anyone's expectations. While the model has sold well in Massachusetts, there has been little enthusiasm for it around the rest of the country, mainly because people are afraid of its potential power.

THE PRESIDENTIAL SPECIAL X-8—Made by the same company, still has great popular appeal with the masses. Many of the plans for this year's design never got off the drawing board. There was trouble at the beginning of the year with the budget. This necessitated cutting back on many of the features that had been advertised in advance. Over a billion dollars was cut for foreign trials, and the manufacturer had to settle for far less power. Model still has to undergo tests in Berlin and Cuba.

THE JACKIE VACATIONER—Beautiful exterior designed by Oleg Cassini. Comes equipped with water skis and pony trailer. Most photographed model of the Kennedy Co. Did great in export sales and showed good stamina in trials at Ravello.

THE BOBBY ROCK—Considered by experts as the most dangerous of the Kennedy Co. styles. Has hard lines, tough body, and tremendous power steering. Many bugs still must be worked out, mainly those to do with integration.

THE NIXON LAST CHANCE—There is nothing new about this design. Lacks good spark plugs; seems even weaker than the 1960 model. The performance so far leaves a great deal to be desired. Tremendous sales resistance in California where tryouts are being held. If it doesn't win enough customers in November, it may go the way of the Edsel.

THE MISSISSIPPI KLANON—Designers refuse to integrate any modern features into this model which looks as if it had been built in the early 19th century. Strong on suspension. Has lost every trial so far, but will not accept any interior changes. Its exhaust can be heard around the world.

So much for U.S. models. Foreign competition is serious.

THE CANSTRO CROCODILE—Soviet engineers have completely remodeled it, adding bullet-proof glass, an armored plate body, and jet-propulsion. Designers claim these are all safety features for domestic use only. But U.S. manufacturers fear the model may be exported to Central and South American countries. Highway patrolmen have orders to stop it at any cost if driven on a foreign road.

THE ULBRICHT UNDETERMINED—Has high potential accident rate, badly constructed governor, walled-in engine, no safety belts. Difficult to get in and out of. Western dealers refuse to buy it, but Russians consider it has high trade-in value.

THE KHRUSHCHEV MADRE RATTLE—Same as last year's model. Tremendous exhaust power. Consumes mighty volatile fuel. Claims it can bury anything else on the road. Success in space research has gone to manufacturer's head. No easy terms.

THE COMMON MARKET—French and Germans have engineered this model which may change the entire industry. British have been invited to buy it, but are haggling over price. Americans, who encouraged its manufacture, are watching the trials with trepidation. Other models coming out of the same factory will be called the DE GAULLE DEFENDER, the DE GAULLE DIPLOMAT, the DE GAULLE DESTINY, etc., etc., etc.

'You Can't Live With a Tornado'

By SHEILAH GRAHAM

HOLLYWOOD (NANA)—Ernie Borgnine's attitude about his disrupted marriage with Katy Jurado: "You can't live with a tornado. I still love her, but one minute she's all for a career and excitement and the next she wants to be a wife and mother. I'm spinning from it all." Poor Marty. And poor, Katy!

Julie Harris took off yesterday for New York and London where she will film The Haunting.

I really had to laugh at some of Richard Burton's latest remarks to a columnist. To read all that guff you'd think he had never even kissed Elizabeth Taylor—and I do mean offscreen. . . . Although to do Richard justice he always told Liz he would never divorce his wife to marry her.

Paul Scofield, who doesn't sing but acts divinely, is in the star Julie Nyne is after for his musical version of The Ghost Goes West. Do you remember Robert Donat in the movie?

Question: Should a conductor kiss a queen? Even for such an emotional event as the opening of New York's Lincoln Centre for the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, I was startled when maestro Leonard Bernstein leaned forward and kissed Mrs. Kennedy with the television cameras blazing away. No one wants to be stuffy. But it seemed to me that this was a sort of state occasion with its special due and don'ts.

Katharine Hepburn has not yet seen the completed movie version of Long Day's Journey into Night. She promised director Sidney Lumet she would wait to see it in New York with him. Katharine is here in Hollywood, where she got a firsthand report about the movie from Hepburn Tracy's brother and Irene Rich, who outshined over her performance at a special preview.

From Maureen O'Halloran, whom I know first as Jane in the Tarzan films: "Every actress dreams of reaching Broadway and after 10 years and 100 pictures in Hollywood, I'm thrilled." Maureen reports to George Abbott November 1, for her starring role in his play Never Too Late.

Chloe Eames will be parting from husband Rod Taylor for a bit while she stars in The Haunting in London, and he remains in New York to do a stage version of Moby Dick. I told you he was versatile.

Election-Year U.S. 'Pushing' Cuba War

HAVANA (AP)—Cuba now stands in great danger of attack, Prime Minister Fidel Castro told a television audience, because U.S. politicians facing November elections are "trying to push the country toward aggression."

He said in the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate "there is a competition to see who can shout loudest. . . It doesn't matter to them that they play with the destiny of the world and play with war."

U.S. Backs Latin Shield

By JOHN HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United States has decided to throw strong support behind Latin-American moves for creation of a Caribbean defence organization.

Deadlock Over Berlin

UNITED NATIONS N.Y. (CP)—A persistent deadlock was reported Saturday after the latest East-West talks about the Berlin situation.

The report came as President Kennedy arranged to review world affairs with State Secretary Dean Rusk and British Foreign Minister Lord Home at lunch Sunday in Washington.

LATE TALKS
A British spokesman said Lord Home discussed the Berlin question with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko late Friday at the Soviet U.N. mission.

"They talked for about 30 minutes," he told a reporter. "They discussed it briefly and then the rest of the time they spent talking about Berlin."

NO PROGRESS
"They went over the ground again but we can't say that they really made any progress."

Formation of a new defence pact, probably embracing 10 nations, is expected to be the central issue at the meeting here Tuesday and Wednesday of foreign ministers of the Organization of American States.

ALL 30 THERE
U.S. officials said all 20 countries active in the OAS—Cuba is an outcast—will be represented.

Administration authorities are reported encouraged by soundings on the Caribbean defence pact concept made in New York this week by Secretary of State Dean Rusk.

WIDE INTEREST
Rusk is said to have found widespread interest in new steps to deal with the continuing buildup of Soviet military might in Cuba in support of Prime Minister Fidel Castro. Latin American foreign ministers are reportedly impressed and concerned by Castro's rapidly expanding ability to make serious trouble in neighboring countries by shipping out Communist agents and arms for subversion in anti-Communist countries.

VITAL AREA
Most commonly mentioned by officials here for possible participation in a new defence arrangement are Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Colombia, Venezuela, and the Dominican Republic, together with the United States.

Kennedy to Speak To Nation Today

Liberator?

Brooklyn lawyer James B. Donovan, who dealt with Russia for release of U.S. U-2 pilot Francis Powers, says he hopes to liberate within two weeks 1,113 prisoners held by Cuba since Bay of Pigs invasion.

WASHINGTON (UPI)—President Kennedy acted with dramatic swiftness late Saturday night to ensure that federal court orders for the University of Mississippi to enroll a Negro be carried out.

In several near-midnight announcements, federal troops were mobilized, the Mississippi national guard federalized and presidential addresses to the nation scheduled.

ENFORCE LAW

The Pentagon announced first the army had been ordered to dispatch units to Memphis, Tenn., and have them prepared to enforce federal law in Mississippi if necessary. The White House followed this with an announcement President Kennedy would address the nation on radio and television Sunday at 4:30 p.m. EDT.

HE APPEARED

Newsmen were then summoned to the White House and the president issued a dramatic near-midnight announcement. He said he had talked with Governor Barnett three times Saturday about the governor's refusal to obey the courts and admit Negro James Meredith to the university. Mr. Kennedy said he appealed to Barnett for "law and order to be obeyed."

But the White House said the president failed to get what it called "satisfactory assurances" from the determined governor.

Soviets Must Depart

NEW YORK (AP)—The United States asked the Soviet Union Saturday to send home two members of the Soviet UN delegation alleged to have bought secret American defense documents from a U.S. sailor.

The request was made in a note from the U.S. delegation delivered to the Soviet delegation.

The two whose recall was asked were Evgeny M. Prokhorov, 31, a second secretary in the Soviet permanent UN mission, and Ivan Y. Vydrinov, 33, a third secretary.

The FBI said it caught the sailor passing navy instructions to Prokhorov Friday night in a car outside a diner in Larchmont, N.Y. Vydrinov was in the car.

FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover identified the sailor as Yeoman Nelson Cornelius Drummond, 33, a native of Baltimore, Md.

Drummond is held on $100,000 bail on a charge of conspiring to transmit information.

U.S. Singer In Red Jail

BERLIN (Reuters)—Gabrielle Hammerstein, a 35-year-old American singer, was sentenced Aug. 3 to six years imprisonment in East Germany on charges of espionage, an American spokesman said yesterday.

News of Miss Hammerstein's sentence reached West Berlin through "private sources," he said.

Miss Hammerstein, of Jackson Heights, N.Y., was tried secretly by an East German court at Neubrandenburg. She had been held incommunicado since she disappeared last January.

U.S. Expert Says Alouette First of Joint Projects

WASHINGTON (UPI)—James Webb, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said yesterday the Canadian-built Alouette satellite was the forerunner of other joint U.S.-Canadian space projects.

Webb and other U.S. officials expressed satisfaction over Saturday's successful launching of the 220-pound Alouette by a U.S. rocket at Point Arguello, Calif.

"It is," he said, "not only an historic example of international cooperation in space, nor only a tribute to the high order of Canadian technology, but is also the forerunner of other cooperative projects of Canada and the United States which will contribute importantly to the world's scientific knowledge."

Webb did not indicate what form U.S.-Canadian space cooperation might take in the future.

He said however "the cooperative launching of the first space craft to be completely designed and built by a nation other than the United States or the Soviet Union is a significant demonstration of the benefits which can be obtained when two nations find effective ways to join in the peaceful exploration of space for the good of all mankind."

'Significant Step' —Petrie

"Canada's earth satellite represents a significant step forward in her study of the upper atmosphere," said Dr. R. M. Petrie, head of the Dominion Astrophysical Observatory, today.

Dr. Petrie said the Alouette satellite was "a fine achievement of the people concerned to design and instrument such an advanced mechanism."

Dr. Petrie said the satellite's chief significance is that it will supplement, from above the atmosphere, the studies already carried out on it from the ground.

The ionosphere is an atmospheric layer which begins about 20 miles from the earth and extends upwards to about 200 miles.

Canadian Disposal Sites

'Hot' Garbage Safe Off Pacific Coast

WASHINGTON (AP)—Low-level, packaged radioactive wastes may be dumped at 40 locations off the Pacific coast of the United States and Canada without endangering human or sea life, a panel of scientists said Saturday.

The panel used a new rule-of-thumb for determining how much radioactive material might be dangerous. The technique is based on the specific activity of chemical elements in the sea.

Eight rectangular disposal sites, each measuring five nautical miles in a side, would be sufficient to dispose of present waste products, mostly leftovers from the use of radioactive isotopes in ocean coast frontiers and research laboratories, the report said. Six of these sites would be located from the Mexican border northward to the Columbia River; two would be north of the Columbia.

Of the 40 possible sites, 20 would be south and 20 north of the Columbia.

The panel of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences and the U.S. National Research Council, in its report released Saturday, recommended that disposal sites be "far away from coastal towns, sea mountains, trenches and canyons. Sites should not be used for any other waste disposal, and disposal depths should be greater than 1,200 fathoms—1½ miles.

Below that depth, the panel said, radioactivity cannot get into edible sea life by direct means. Generally, the amount of radioactivity can be dumped increases with the depth of the site.

Radioactive wastes would be contained in drums or other safe packaging materials. In the past such packaged wastes from the western U.S. have been dumped in drums on the ocean floor mostly at two sites off the California coast.

The study supplements one made a few years ago of the Atlantic coast situation. The findings were roughly the same as to depth requirements and so forth. However, because of the extent of the Atlantic coastal shelf of relatively shallow water, the disposal problem on that coast is more complicated, an Academy of Sciences spokesman said.

TORONTO (TNS) — If you happen to be on a Toronto-Ottawa or vice-versa flight this year have a look at the male passengers.

If one of them has a pair of skates in one hand and a briefcase in the other, it won't need his red hair to prove you are travelling with Leonard Patrick (Red) Kelly, Maple Leaf centre star and Liberal MP for York West.

It won't matter what day you conduct your search.

Red Kelly's present plans are to fly to Ottawa and back by air every day except Saturday and Sunday as he tries to combine the two careers of professional hockey player and Member of Parliament.

He's been told by Howie Meeker, the only other hockey star elected during his playing career, that it can't be done.

BEYOND CONFIDENT
But air schedules are better now than when Howie was a member, says Red confidently.

We sat in the lobby of the Empress Hotel in Peterborough where Leafs have been training and talked about the problem.

Red sees himself becoming an almost daily Toronto-Ottawa commuter, with a round trip of about 300 miles.

He'll practice with the team here in the morning. He'll fly to Ottawa to be in the House afternoon and evening. The House sits till 10 p.m. Then he'll fly back.

"It's only a 50-minute flight," said the speedy star cheerily, "and I like flying. I can catch up with my reading."

He didn't mention the traveling time to and from airports that will mean at least three extra hours each day.

And he hasn't yet figured out how much all that air travel will cost.

Except for one or two flights a year MPs pay their own air fares.

Return fare to Ottawa is $32 first class; $38 economy.

If the House should sit all through the hockey season (and October to April is only seven months compared to the nine months it sometimes lasts) air fares could be as much as $9,000 and not much less than $6,000.

A Member's salary is $10,000. Red Kelly hasn't signed his hockey contract for this season yet.

The delay, he says, is partly because of salary and partly politics. (Last year he was said to be in the $19,000 class.)

"I haven't talked to Punch (Punch Imlach, Leafs' general manager) about money, and I want to have a talk to Mr. Pearson to see what's expected of me in Ottawa before I sign," he said.

Meanwhile he's working hard to be ready for both jobs.

HEATED TO OTTAWA
Having survived the Leafs' rigorous training camp program, Red is working out by himself while the rest of the team travels through the West.

Some skating every day is a must.

He worked for the Liberals in the Stormont by-election in July, went to meetings, studied current affairs and the setup of Parliament.

When he flew to Winnipeg with the Leafs for their exhibition game last week his "light" travel reading was the 68-page Gleaner report on Canadian Government operations.

He doesn't even like to think of another election campaign right away, and doubts if there will be one before spring.

TOUGH SCHEDULE
This is the first week politics and hockey have really overlapped for Red Kelly, and he looks tired.

No wonder. Here is his schedule for the first two days:

Sunday night late: Arrived home from Winnipeg.

Monday morning: Drives to Peterboro to be on ice at 9 a.m.

Monday afternoon, after 2:30 workout: Drives home to Leaside. Rushes in meeting in Long Branch. Back home after meeting. Drives wife and two children to Simcoe to leave babies with Grandma Kelly. Arrives home 2:30 a.m.

Tuesday morning: Misses 9 a.m. Peterboro workout. Arrives with pretty red-haired wife 11:30 a.m. No time for lunch. Goes right to arena. Skates 1½ hours. Drives on to Ottawa.

Maybe that flying program he's planning won't be so tough after all!

Pennant Race Goes Down to Last Day As Giants Split and Dodgers Blanked

Two-hit pitching by Ernie Broglio gave St. Louis Cardinals a 2-0 victory over the reeling Los Angeles Dodgers last night and sent the National League into the final day of the schedule with the pennant race still unsettled.

Dodgers were assured of at least a tie and a playoff with

San Francisco when Houston Colts split with the Giants yesterday afternoon, winning the second game 4-2 after losing 11-5. But with a chance to wrap it up at home, Dodgers found last night that even Don Drysdale wasn't enough to match Broglio, an ex-Giant.

Drysdale, going for his 26th victory, tossed a commendable five-hitter. But Broglio gave up a single to Duke Snider in the first, another to Wally Moon in the second, and was untouchable from there on. So it goes into the last day, the Giants against the Cards, with the Dodgers one game in front.

Giants, who must win while Dodgers lose to force a playoff, will send Billy O'Dell (19-14) against ex-Dodger Dick Farrell (19-18). Dodgers will use Johnny Podres (13-12), the Cards Curt Simmons (9-10).

A crowd of 45,012 paid to see Broglio win at Los Angeles, giving Dodgers the all-time season mark for the major leagues — 2,641,845 compared to 2,620,627 drawn by Cleveland Indians in 1948. They saw superb pitching as Dodgers lost for the ninth time in the last 12 games.

At one stretch after Moon singled, Broglio retired 17 Dodgers in a row. He struck out nine, walked three and never let a Dodger past second base.

An error by Frank Howard paved the way for Cards two runs in the second inning. Charlie James and Broglio followed it with singles for the win. They also landed the bases with one out in the third, but Ken Boyer hit into a double play.

Giants bombed the Colts for nine runs in the first two innings of the first game, getting home runs from Tom Haller, Willie McCovey and Orlando Cepeda.

But Houston's Bob Bruce, giving himself the distinction of a winning season (10-9) with the lowly Colts, stopped them on six hits in the second game. Ex-Dodger Norm Larker put Colts ahead to stay with a two-run homer in the third off loser Juan Marchal.

Warren Spahn pitched Milwaukee to a 7-3 win over Pittsburgh Pirates, and became the winningest left-handed pitcher in baseball history with his 327th victory.

Kapp and Receivers Blitz Eskimos, 46-24

EDMONTON — Joe Kapp and his fleet-footed receivers gave Edmonton's biggest football crowd of the season — almost 20,000 fans — a display of aerial acrobatics which completely spoiled "Rollie Miller Night" at Clark Stadium and stamped the Lions as still-solid contenders for a Western Conference playoff spot.

Kapp threw six touchdown passes and scored once himself as the Lions capped their greatest week ever with a 46-21 trump over the Eskimos. It followed Monday night's tremendous 27-21 win over Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

Kapp combined with rookie Mack Burton for touchdown plays which covered 73 and 68 yards, with Willie Fleming for 34 yards, with Jim Carphin for three yards, and Kapp scored himself with a one-yard plunge after two passes, to Pat Clardy for 21 yards and Carphin for 26, and a 15-yard run by Willie Fleming had set it up.

It was the most impressive display of quick-striking power Edmonton fans had seen in some time.

OPEN BIG LEAD
After being held the first time they got the ball, the Lions scored touchdowns the next three times they got possession as they moved into a 20-0 lead.

Kapp got the first one as the Lions took 10 plays to go 82 yards. Burton got his first after a 19-yard pass to Fleming had moved the Lions out to their 37-yard line. Burton took the ball on the 50 and just ran away from would-be tacklers.

On the first play after Sonny Homer had intercepted a pass thrown by ex-Lion Jim Walden, Kapp threw long to Fleming, who juggled the ball, then caught it on the five-yard line and went over.

TWO MORE HOMES
A field goal by Ted Tully put Eskimos on the score sheet and it was 24-0 late in the second quarter when Kapp threw 39 yards to Fleming, got a first down in two ground plays, lost 10 yards on a holding penalty, and then hit Larchfield on the Edmonton 25. Larchfield went the rest of the way, and it was 27-0 at the half.

Big Regina Rally Scuttles Argos

REGINA — Saskatchewan Roughriders, held to one point in 45 minutes, scored 20 more in a frantic fourth quarter here last night and beat Toronto Argonauts, 21-17, to move into third place in the Western Conference of the Canadian Football League.

Halfback Ray Purdin scored the winning touchdown with 57 seconds left in regulation time, taking quarterback Bob Placek to the Saskatchewan 50-yard line and racing the rest of the way to complete an 80-yard play.

PLACEK STARS
Placek was the man who engineered Riders' stirring comeback. With his club trailing 11-1, he passed them down to the Toronto two-yard line, where Bill Gray plunged for the touchdown, converted by Reg. Whitehouse. Then he passed 27 yards to Ford Burkes for an unconverted touchdown at 3:40 to send Riders ahead, 14-11.

Argonauts fought back, scoring on a 62-yard pass play from Tolen Rote to Aubrey Linne and holding Riders on downs twice to protect a 17-14 lead. But in the last minute, Purdin broke clear for an instant, and Placek threw a perfect, game-winning pass.

Placek, an all-star corner linebacker of last year who took over at quarterback this season only because a couple of Rider rookies didn't work out, completed 16 of 22 passes for 323 yards.

Results left Riders two points behind second-place Calgary and one ahead of B.C. Lions with a game in hand over each Argos, in last place in the Eastern Conference, have won once in eight starts.

Royals, St. Andrews Quit League Plan to Continue Soccer Fight

New Westminster Royals and St. Andrews withdrew from the Pacific Coast Soccer League yesterday — but they aren't through fighting the B.C. Soccer Commission.

The clubs held a joint meeting yesterday at Callister

Park, then informed league president Bill Findler of their decision, saying a formal letter will follow at a later date.

Royals and St. Andrews quit the nine-team league over its decision to bow to an order by the B.C. Soccer Commission and admit Vancouver Pilseners, champions of the mainland league, as the ninth team.

Earlier in the week the executive of Victoria United, faced with the same decision, knuckled under and agreed to go along with the league, although all eight teams had previously decided by unanimous vote to fight the commission.

MAY APPEAL
"We left the league, but we're not finished fighting this thing," said Royals manager Jack Spary. "We're going to seek more advice, and then perhaps appeal to the Canadian Soccer Association."

"We weren't satisfied with the arbitration board that made the decision that Pilseners were to be put in," Spary said.

An arbitration board was set up after St. Andrews refused to continue a promotion-relegation series. Ron Matthews represented the BCRA and Bill Mahaffey represented St. Andrews on the three-man board, which was chaired by Hugh Spary, then informed league president Bill Findler of their decision, saying a formal letter will follow at a later date.

CPR Sinks Nanaimo Plea

NANAIMO — Hopes were dashed last night that the CPR's doomed Nanaimo-Vancouver ferry run might be granted a last-minute lease on life by the big transportation company.

The service ends today.

A last-ditch attempt by Nanaimo Chamber of Commerce, to save the service by wiring an appeal direct to CPR president N. J. Crump, has ended in failure.

Mr. Crump sent the following message:

"It is my understanding our vice-president and general manager at Vancouver in charge of the Pacific Region met with you last month and discussed reduction in our Vancouver-Nanaimo ferry service. Notwithstanding, I am sure Mr. Fraire will be prepared to meet you again, if it would be helpful.

In regard to your expressed concern for provision of service from downtown Nanaimo to downtown Vancouver, he is bound to point out, however, that the Princess of Vancouver will continue to provide such a service, that none of our ships are suitable for operation from ferry slips at Vancouver and Nanaimo and further, that alternative service between downtown points for foot passengers will be available by buses operated via government ferries."

NO SURPRISE

The final decision of the CPR to reduce its service came as no surprise here, but its action in raising the fares to be paid by foot passengers on the Princess of Vancouver drew sharp condemnation from some quarters.

Don Cunliffe, president of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of Vancouver Island said "I am absolutely shocked by this action, which simply cannot be justified."

Harold Hine, president of the Nanaimo Chamber of Commerce, asked: "What additional service is the CPR providing to justify this increase? While the bus service of the government ferries provides certain conveniences and amenities, such as shelter from the rain, handling of baggage and so on, the CPR Princess of Vancouver service makes no provision whatsoever for the convenience of passengers."

SEEN PATTERN

Mayor Pats Maffeo said he was not surprised at the news of the increase, "because it simply follows a pattern already set." Each time the B.C. Ferry Service has increased its fares, the CPR has immediately followed suit.

The mayor continued: "The B.C. ferries, which have inflated all the increases, have been making money according to Premier Bennett, and therefore were in no need of the additional income. When the financial report of the toll authority is made public, we will know whether these increases can be justified, but we shall never know anything about the CPR operations, or how much money it makes or loses."

Rotary Chief Visits

QUALICUM BEACH — Gordon Tongue, Rotary district governor, paid a visit to the Qualicum Beach club recently. He is presently making visits to all 45 Rotary Clubs in the district.

Introduced by club president J. Craig Reid, Mr. Tongue addressed members of the local club at an assembly during which committee reports were presented.

He praised the club on its beach improvement project, and the successful annual Rotary Club auction.

The district governor and Mrs. Tongue were guests of club president Reid at a social gathering held at Eaglecrest, which Rotary Club members and their wives also attended.

Theft, Not Violence

An 18-year-old former miller who was found not guilty of robbery with violence was found guilty of theft of articles valued at less than $50.

He was Donald G. Tucker. Involved in the theft were a wrist watch and a $5 bill.

Tucker denied the original charge of robbery with violence involving a Kilmat man, James Rowley, but Magistrate William Oster found him guilty of theft.

As no evidence was tendered by city prosecutor as to the value of the watch, Mr. Oster said he would find Tucker guilty of theft under $50.

SIX MONTHS

Tucker was released on a $250 bond to be of good behavior for six months.

Clifford Hobbs, 708 Suffolk, was fined $250 for impaired driving and $100 each on two charges of failing to remain at the scene of accidents on Douglas Street and Johnson Street Bridge.

Edward McCullough, HMCS Naden, was fined $200 for failing to remain at the scene of an accident on Quadra Street.

Colonist Clarifies Report Made by Union Leader

On Sept. 28 this newspaper published a statement made by Mr. E. P. O'Neal, secretary of the B.C. Federation of Labor. Mr. O'Neal made a statement to one of our reporters in reference to the application of MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Co. for permission to prosecute the IWA local at Port Alberni.

It has been suggested that the statement made by Mr. O'Neal conveys the inference that MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Co. or its officers have done something illegal or have been guilty of reprehensible conduct.

It is clear from the article in question that the reporter merely quoted what was stated by Mr. O'Neal. This newspaper sincerely regrets any embarrassment caused to MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River Co. and its officers.

Prices Rising Wives Agree

Greater Victoria housewives last night agreed that food prices have risen since the federal austerity campaign began June 24—but they didn't seem very worried about it.

FOOD RESISTANT, HOWEVER, WERE MORE POSITIVE.

ALMOST ALL UP

Lawrence Westendale, president of Independent Men's Co-operative Association of Victoria, a group of small food stores, said almost all food items have risen.

"Especially all food coming from outside," he said, "like fruit juice from the States."

"If there is a general price rise everyone wants to get on the bandwagon."

Biggest jump in food costs appears to be in meat. Norman Peck, 238-A St. James, who owns a butcher shop on north Douglas near the Fountain Circle, said prices are still rising.

DOLLAR BLAMED

Mr. Peck said that since the austerity campaign began, beef prices have risen about 30 to 40 cents a pound for customers and pork has jumped about 20 cents a pound.

COSTLY WAR

The Second World War is estimated to have run down British domestic capital by about $3,000,000,000.

Prices Rising Wives Agree

Greater Victoria housewives last night agreed that food prices have risen since the federal austerity campaign began June 24—but they didn't seem very worried about it.

FOOD RESISTANT, HOWEVER, WERE MORE POSITIVE.

ALMOST ALL UP

Lawrence Westendale, president of Independent Men's Co-operative Association of Victoria, a group of small food stores, said almost all food items have risen.

"Especially all food coming from outside," he said, "like fruit juice from the States."

Logging Roads Open

Fire Hazard Melts Under Fall Deluge

NANAIMO—Heavy rain of the last 48 hours has virtually eliminated any fire hazard in the woods, and as a result the logging companies have opened all gates leading to logging areas for hunters.

This applies to all logging company lands except Mayo, but the Nanaimo River camp of MacMillan, Bloedel and Powell River is open only to members of fish and game clubs who are holders of permits.

NANAIMO—All the money in the Royal Bank trust account for the Jim Jenkins fund has been remitted by the bank to the University of Washington Hospital at Seattle, where Mr. Jenkins will shortly undergo a vital heart operation.

The amount which has accumulated in the account as far as a result of public subscription is $388.

PORT ALBERNI—Mrs. Alma Smeback, New Westminster, secretary of the Norwegian organizations sponsoring the North American tour of the Shortland Band of Norway, is in West Coast Hospital being treated for leg lacerations following a high way accident early Saturday morning.

According to RCMP, a vehicle driven by Casper Jacobsen, 2742 16th Ave., Vancouver, with Mrs. Smeback as a passenger, failed to negotiate a turn on Alberni Highway east of the mountain, crashed into a guard rail and turned on its side.

The driver and another passenger, Rudolf Olson, New Westminster, escaped injury.

LAKE COWICHAN—Two cars and a truck eastbound on Lake Cowichan Road were involved in a front-end collision eight miles east of the village Friday night but no one was injured.

Drivers involved were John Hruksa of Victoria, Hendrik Van Rossum of Honeymoon Bay and the truck operator, George H. Muldrew of Victoria.

First car, driven by Mr. Hruksa, stopped around a curve behind a large house trailer and the two following vehicles, unable to halt in time, crashed into each other.

Police said rain was pouring down at the time and the road was very slippery. Damage was estimated at $700. Driver of the car pulling the trailer was not identified.

COURTENAY — Fire broke out for 24 hours under the watchful eye of Courtenay firemen after a tanker from Nanaimo caught fire after being struck by a jackknifing trailer Friday two miles south of Courtenay.

The firemen, working in two-hour shifts, kept water played on the tanker to keep it cool while escaping gas burned.

The flames finally flickered out about 11 a.m. Saturday.

DUNCAN — Members of the Maple Bay Yacht Club last night said goodbye to club house managers Mr. and Mrs. Neil S. Skelton.

The retiring couple will take up residence on Salt Spring Island. Officially closing the year's yachting season, a presentation dinner and dance is slated for Oct. 6 at the club house, when sailing awards will be presented.

Next Friday, for the first time, the Crofton group sponsors a beginners' class in silk screening under the instruction of well-known teacher Arnold Barrett at the studio of Mrs. S. Witham on James Street in Duncan.

Mr. Barrett will also instruct the regular oil painting class that afternoon at the Crofton Church Hall.

President of the group, H. W. Swallow, said members are mainly interested in oil and water colors.

CHENAINUR—Schools here and in Ladysmith will be visited Oct. 1 and 2 respectively by The Canadian Forestry Association's staff lecturer, Dave Campbell, who will show films and talk to students about game and wildlife management.

The three-week lecture tour started at the junior secondary school at Lake Cowichan and classes were given to Duncan students.

DUNCAN—Recently returned from a two-week leadership course at Nanaimo near Portlen, six young people told a large meeting of the Duncan AOTS group of their experience. Taking part in the course were John Morton, Lynn Richardson, Gail Brookbank, Bernice Flatt, Nordahl Klakstad and Maureen Sked.

Tally-Ho Is All Right But Not 'Bally-Hoo'

Violent opponents of Causeway commercialization will get mild support from the average Victoria resident. If a random Colonial survey is any indication.

But they should not expect him to take to the barricades to halt the sightseeing bus.

A significant minority of those polled up last night by a Colonial reporter felt the Causeway is just the place where sightseeing buses ought to park to cap the tourist's dollar for Victoria packets.

A couple of people—in contrast to a more widespread sentiment for older, quieter days in Victoria—rather like the bustle and bustle which characterized the Empress Hotel-legendary buildings area this year.

Some thought the Tally-Ho is a tourist attraction which lends distinctiveness to Victoria. Others thought they were out of place.

Two members of the majority who do feel the Causeway is too commercialized volunteered the impression that is happening to Victoria is symbolized by the Empress Hotel's finding it necessary to put up a big sign telling people that's what it is.

What prompted the informal Colonial survey was the writing of a letter to Victoria city council last week by the Native

Sons of B.C. Post Number One, objecting to commercialization of the Causeway.

The letter said despite the beauty of the legislative buildings and of the Empress Hotel, the area is rapidly losing aesthetic appeal. The letter objected to Tally-Ho, sightseeing buses and commercial vending trucks which, it complained, obstructed the view of the Inner Harbor.

H. V. Wymore, 903 Quebec, said he "somewhat agrees" with the Sons' stand. "I'm not against these activities. We need them in the tourist season. But I'd like to see them based, not on the Causeway or in front of the Parliament Buildings, but, say, a block away."

Miss M. W. Sedgley of 431 Heather, a longtime resident, said: "I don't mind the Tally-

Ho but we don't need all the bally-hoo. I liked Victoria as it was, to be."

But the sightseeing bus operators "are making a living and aren't bothering anybody," according to Mrs. M. G. Newberry of 408 Parry.

S. R. Hinde of 423 Parry thought sightseeing buses on the Causeway this year about reached the "maturity point. If we get any more we'll be just another American city instead of the quiet little burgh we like so much."

He said the buses likely hamper tourists trying to take pictures of the Empress Hotel from across the street.

"I only know what I like to see," said Miss D. H. Neal of 1702 Quadra. "I didn't mind it when there was only one but I think all this is rather too much."

Choice for Saanich:

Build Municipal Hall Or Merge with City

Working conditions are "unspeakable" at the old Saanich municipal hall at Royal Oak, Coun. Robert Chard charged last night.

"It's perfectly obvious the conditions under which the staff is working are hopeless. I went through the building the other day and saw a mailing machine working behind a furnace in the basement."

Saanich has reached the point where it must either build a new municipal hall or amalgamate with Victoria and use the facilities of the proposed city hall expansion, he said.

At the head of the list of major problems facing Saanich council this fall is the question of amalgamation, said the councillor.

"Saanich cannot make any fundamental decisions until that is decided," he said, adding: "It would be pitiful to spend $500,000 on a municipal hall when amalgamation could be an established fact within a couple of years."

Conditions are so bad at the municipal hall that, if amalgamation is defeated at the polls in the December referendum, council "should go ahead immediately with its new hall."

Other problems which he said must be faced by council:

● Major park acquisition, including the Moore property on Gordon Point—the last remaining waterfront acreage between Cadboro Bay and Cordova Bay—and the McRae estate, including the Cedar Hill Golf Course, where there is room for a stadium and a first-class integrated recreation centre for the whole of Greater Victoria.

● Council should see fit to allocate more money each year for major roads, with top priority being given to development of Mackenzie Avenue and other east-west roads.

● The water program should be accelerated, especially the replacement of semi-obsolete two-inch pipe which will take 15 years at the present rate of replacement.

THAT'S TOO BAD

Coun. Chard is up for reelection in December. Asked whether he feared he might lose his council seat for advocating measures which might boost the tax burden, he said: "If I get defeated telling the people what I think, that's too bad."

'Downtown' Soon At Saanich Line

By JACK FRY

Greater Victoria shoppers in a few years' time will call the city-Saanich boundary on Douglas the "downtown" commercial district, a Saanich councillor predicted yesterday.

Coun. Gregory Cook said he thought downtown businesses will move to the fringes of the large Mayfair shopping centre under construction just south of the Saanich boundary at Douglas and Tolmie.

MAJOR AREA

Two community planners agreed the mile-long stretch of land east of Douglas between the Town-and-Country shopping centre and the Mayfair shopping centre will become a major commercial area, but felt there was no immediate danger of city merchants suffering because of it.

MAJOR ROUTE

Coun. Cook said the northward movement of business started with the shift of Victoria to Vancouver ferry service from Inner Harbor to Swartz Bay, turning the Patricia Bay Highway into a major route.

A report in the vicinity of the Patricia Bay and Trans-Canada Highway intersection is now a natural location for commercial development, he said.

PARKING BAN

Ironically, the promise of healthy commercial growth near North Douglas comes at a time when numerous Saanich city merchants are faced with lack of customers because of a parking ban imposed in connection with the recent Douglas Street beautification project.

HANDFUL OF BLOCKS

Douglas Street, it seems, will not become another Kingsway, and the land of plenty will be just east of Douglas in a handful of blocks linking the Town-and-Country and Mayfair shopping centres.

Saanich municipal planner Anthony Parr said he has no doubt the centres will be linked with stores.

LOT OF LAND

"There's a lot of land on the east side of Douglas ripe for development. Once the traffic pattern is established at the Mayfair shopping centre, that will be valuable property."

MORE GOING UP

Capital Region Planning Board director Anthony Roberts said: "There will be more commercial development going up in that area, but it will tend to be the drive-in type of commerce."

RANKER ACCESS

To remain prosperous in the time of still competition from the shopping centres the downtown area must provide easier access to the heart of the city, more parking space and pedestrian malls, he said.

Salty Plane Engine Lifted from Ocean

A salt-soaked aircraft engine was picked up yesterday by the deep sea dragger Elwin S. between Albert Head and William Head.

The engine, picked up from 45 fathoms, will be examined today by military officials.

It is believed to be of Second World War vintage.

The 60-foot trawler was skippered by Herbert Smith of Victoria.

Tree Bears Motor

"Officer, you probably won't believe this but there's a motor hanging in a tree on Shelbourne Street," said the lady who telephoned the police station.

"Oh?" replied the constable, raising his eyebrows. As it turned out the call was no rib.

The investigating constable found the owner of the motor had used the tree to lift the machine out of his car.

Police pointed out that the motor was not in keeping with the area's scenery and the amateur mechanic took it down.

Pensioners Meet Tuesday

Victoria Aged Pensioners Association No. 3 will meet at Legion Hall, 1616 Blanshard, at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday. They will also be guests of Cedar Hill Golf Club every Friday next month.

Scores Line Up For Seat Belts

A Victoria doctor bought two seat belts for his car yesterday because "I have treated too many people who were slashed up in car accidents solely because they were not using them."

Dr. W. Billung-Myer, who is an intern at St. Joseph's emergency ward, was one of the more than 100 people who had seat belts installed in their cars yesterday by three car clubs working together at the vacant Fyfe Cleaners lot on Douglas Street.

More than 100 belts were sold by the Mystics, Roadsters and Quarter-Miler car clubs, who also installed many belts which had been purchased elsewhere.

Many people who have been putting off buying the belts are taking advantage of the car clubs' free installation offer.

Mrs. K. McKenzie, of 358 Broadway, who bought five belts, one for each member of her family, said she has been planning to buy them for some time, but the free installation offer made it a lot easier.

CLARE CALLS

Mrs. Beverly Phillips, of 2414 Inlet, is having the belts installed because she and her husband have had a few close calls in their car, and this makes the odds a little bit more in their favor.

The clubs will repeat the drive today and every weekend, and the demand falls off, a club spokesman said yesterday.

In the event of rain, the installations will be done at Henry's Lady Shop, 887 View Street.

Art Loan Monday

A picture loan will be held Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the Greater Victoria Art Gallery at which several new pictures will be on view and available for rental.

Time Change SOUTH Of Border

While nearly a dozen Washingtonians turned their clocks back an hour today, B.C. timepieces remained on daylight saving time.

Daylight saving time ended at 8 a.m. today in the State of Washington. But the B.C. cabinet decided earlier to keep daylight saving time to have an extra month this year, with clocks reverting to standard time at 8 a.m. on Oct. 12.

'An Interesting Fellow'

By DON GAIN

"Master Gunner of St. James's Park" General Sir Robert Mansergh, GCB, KBE, MC, made an impressive entrance to Victoria yesterday, bearing messages from the Queen.

"Our Captain General who is, of course, Her Majesty The Queen, instructed me before I left, to inform you she takes a very great interest in you. She further instructed me to give you her good wishes and she said she was pleased with the close tie-up between the gunners of Britain and the gunners of Canada," the general told units of the 5th (B.C.) Independent Medium Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery, following the inspection yesterday afternoon at Bay Street Armouries.

The tall, dignified general

showed his soldierly bearing in a pukka inspection and then displayed his warmth in his talk to the men.

He lauded them for the time and effort they put into their training on their own time.

"Your wives and mothers

contribute, too," he said. "They make a contribution through every man on the parade ground."

"His message for the future was to go out to meet it. 'Look ahead,' he said. 'Go to the moon if you like, but take the tradition of the Royal Regiment along with you."

Sir Robert told of visiting Canadian gunners in Germany. "I was due somewhere else at three o'clock. At 5:30 I was still with them," he said.

And that is the way it was yesterday. He spent over an hour with the young cadet gunners in their mess.

"The general told me the parade was very good," said Cadet James Cox, Jr., 15, of 1287 Duke. The cadet's father, Cdr. James Cox, has been with the 5th regiment since 1940.

Cadet Rod Kathrens, 19, of 2519 Fernwood, had a talk with the Master Gunner and found him "quite an interesting fellow."

"Not stuffy, very easy to talk to" was the reaction of Robert Lewis, 19, 356 St. Charles.

'We'll Still Have Gunners Firing Rockets, Missiles'

"We will still have gunners," was the reply of the master gunner, General Sir Robert Mansergh, when asked what effort the weapons of the future would have on the role of the gunner.

"We will still have ordnance weapons," he said, "and in the firing of rockets and other missiles there are duties for gunners. I have been visiting units which are using new weapons and I still regard them as gunners. And there will still be a master gunner," he concluded.

Sweeping Charges Dismay Woman After Cleanup

STAFF NOTEBOOK By Ted Shackleford

CLEAN SWEEP: Ready-made for Victoria's new Better Bimingham Bureau, managed by W. B. Tindall, is the local firm which phoned a city woman the other day and announced: "We'll be around at one o'clock tomorrow to sweep your chimney. With that he's right!" The woman assumed her husband had arranged the service as she agreed. But after her chimney had been swept she was presented with a bill and an argument when she wouldn't pay. It's not hard to find out who rents a home—the Victoria directory includes this information.

FIRST SHOT: It might be jumping the gun to mention this so early, but first round in the heavy-weight Saanich amalgamation fight will be held Oct. 11 in Prospect Lake school. Steve Ross Murphy and Conn. Joe Casey will be the principals with Prospect Lake Community Association president Brian Hulse as referee. Should be a round turn-out.

PHONE FUN: And, then there's the city businessman—no names, no hurt feelings—who has a bright way of getting rid of long-winded telephone callers. If they won't take a polite hint he's busy, this businessman waits until he is talking and then gently cuts himself off. The psychology behind it is that people who like to talk just would believe someone would cut himself off in the middle of a word. It works, too.

GOOD BIRD: That family social and recreation club planned by Dolphin Recreation Art Knight should be able to get good rates for fire insurance—Saanich's No. 3 firehall is in one corner of the site. Purchase of the land was completed yesterday for an undisclosed sum. The 17-acre site is at the corner of Shelbourne Street and Ruby Road, abutting the Victoria Univer-

WHAT'S IN A NAME? Interesting item came to light last night about a Swedish migrant named Nels Anden Anderson who came to Canada years ago. Mr. Anderson decided his name was too common so he changed it. He's now known as Nels Anden Anden and he lives at 614 Atlin. Story was told by Mr. (Anderson) Smith's son, Nels Smith, 228 Goldstream.

WILL POWER: Heard yesterday of a city insurance man who makes his contacts by offering to draw up a will for someone. He doesn't want to be a retired bank man and his age is in the 60s as his boy friend good deal for the day. Of course, to draw up a will he has to know whether or not the person has any insurance.

Four Men Survive Sea Drama

Four men were rescued—when their 15-foot drum motor overturned in the choppy waters off Texada Island last night.

The boat was spotted floating upside down about 2½ miles south of Gillies Bay on the west side of Texada Island.

Another fish boat, the Uni, was seen on the scene, searched the waters around the wreck for survivors.

At 7:09 p.m. the sea drama had a happy ending as the Sea Fury's crew of four walked out of the bush into Gillies Bay, tired, a little scared but otherwise uninjured.

In spite of the boiling sea they managed to row ashore in time.

Four men were rescued—when their 15-foot drum motor overturned in the choppy waters off Texada Island last night.

The boat was spotted floating upside down about 2½ miles south of Gillies Bay on the west side of Texada Island.

Poor weather, which hampered the search for a missing Victoria pilot and his aircraft yesterday, may once again not be over the area where he is feared down today.

Air-sea rescue officials said there was little hope for an improvement in the weather. The missing pilot is Ernest Johnson of Courtenay, B.C.

He took off from Courtenay at 9:05 a.m. Thursday, and for Victoria, and was found in his C-47, crashed, and was last heard from when he reported his position over Princeton and asked for a weather report at 11:35 a.m.

The flight from Courtenay to Victoria takes about 2½ hours.

Nine RCAF aircraft and two civilian planes took part in yesterday's search but were unable to get close to key search areas.

"The areas we would like to concentrate on are the ones that are obscured by the weather. We have been hindered considerably and tomorrow's weather outlook isn't too good," an air-sea rescue official said last night.

He said planes would be standing by at first light today and would take to the air as soon as there was a break in the weather.

Hunters yesterday reported seeing flashes from a mountain top south of Oliver but probing search planes were unable to find any trace of the missing aircraft.

A ground party has gone in to search the area but officials think the flashes may have come from a microwave reflector on the mountain.

Tally-Ho Is All Right But Not 'Bally-Hoo'

Virulent opponents of Causeway commercialization will get mild support from the average Victoria resident, if a random Colonist survey is any indication.

But they should not expect him to take to the barricades to halt the sightseeing bus.

A significant minority of those phoned up last night by a Colonist reporter felt the Causeway is just the place where sightseeing buses ought to park to crop the tourist's dollar for Victoria pockets.

A couple of people—in contrast to a more widespread nostalgia for older, quieter days in Victoria—rather like the bustle and bustle which characterized the Empress Hotel-legendary buildings area this year.

Some thought the Tally-Ho is a tourist attraction which lends distinctiveness to Victoria. Others thought they were out of place.

Two members of the majority who do feel the Causeway is too commercialized volunteered the impression what is happening to Victoria is symbolized by the Empress Hotel's finding it necessary to put up a big sign telling people that's what it is.

What prompted the informal Colonist survey was the writing of a letter to Victoria city council last week by the Native

Sons of B.C. Post Number One, objecting to commercialization of the Causeway.

The letter said despite the beauty of the legislative buildings and of the Empress Hotel, the area is rapidly losing aesthetic appeal. The letter objected to Tally-Ho, sightseeing buses and commercial vending trucks which, it complained, obstructed the view of the Inner Harbor.

H. V. Wymore, 303 Quebec, said he "somewhat agrees" with the Sons' stand. "I'm not against these activities. We need them in the tourist season. But I'd like to see them based, not on the Causeway or in front of the Parliament Buildings, but, say, a block away."

Miss M. W. Sedgley of 431 Heather, a long-time resident, said: "I don't mind the Tally-

Ho but we don't need all the bally-hoo I liked Victoria as it used to be."

But the sightseeing bus operators "are making a living and aren't bothering anybody," according to Mrs. M. G. Newberry of 408 Parry.

S. R. Hinde of 423 Parry thought sightseeing buses on the Causeway this year about reached the "saturation point. If we get any more we'll be just another American city instead of the quiet little barge we like so much."

He said the buses likely hamper tourists trying to take pictures of the Empress Hotel from across the street.

"I only know what I like to see," said Miss D. H. Neal of 1702 Quadra. "I didn't mind it when there was only one but I think all this is rather too much."

Choice for Saanich:

Build Municipal Hall Or Merge with City

Working conditions are "unspeakable" at the old Saanich municipal hall at Royal Oak, Coun. Robert Chard charged last night.

"It's perfectly obvious the conditions under which the staff is working are hopeless. I went through the building the other day and saw a mailing machine working behind a furnace in the basement."

Saanich has reached the point where it must either build a new municipal hall or amalgamate with Victoria and use the facilities of the proposed city hall expansion, he said.

At the head of the list of major problems facing Saanich council this fall is the question of amalgamation, said the councillor.

"Saanich cannot make any fundamental decisions until that is decided," he said, adding: "It would be pitiful to spend $500,000 on a municipal hall when amalgamation could be an established fact within a couple of years."

Conditions are so bad at the municipal hall that, if amalgamation is defeated at the polls in the December referendum, council "should go ahead immediately with its new hall."

OTHER PROBLEMS

Other problems which he said must be faced by council:

● Major park acquisition, including the Moore property on Gordon Point—the last remaining waterfront acreage between Cadboro Bay and Cordova Bay—and the McRae estate, including the Cedar Hill Golf Course, where there is room for a stadium and a first-class integrated recreation centre for the whole of Greater Victoria.

● Council should see fit to allocate more money each year for major roads, with top priority being given to development of Mackenzie Avenue and other east-west roads.

● The water program should be accelerated, especially the replacement of semi-obsolete two-inch pipe which will take 15 years at the present rate of replacement.

TEARS TOO BAD

Coun. Chard is up for reelection in December. Asked whether he feared he might lose his council seat for advocating measures which might boost the tax burden, he said: "If I get defeated telling the people what I think, that's too bad."

By JACK FRY

Greater Victoria shoppers in a few years' time will call the city-Saanich boundary on Douglas the "downtown" commercial district, a Saanich councillor predicted yesterday.

Coun. Gregory Cook said he thought downtown businesses will move to the fringes of the large Mayfair shopping centre under construction just south of the Saanich boundary at Douglas and Tolmie.

MAJOR AREA

Two community planners agreed the mile-long stretch of land east of Douglas between the Town-and-Country shopping centre and the Mayfair shopping centre will become a major commercial area, but felt there was no immediate danger of city merchants suffering because of it.

MAJOR ROUTE

Coun. Cook said the northward movement of business started with the shift of Victoria to Vancouver ferry services from Inner Harbor to Swartz Bay, turning the Patricia Bay Highway into a major route.

Property in the vicinity of the Patricia Bay and Trans-Canada Highway intersection is now a natural location for commercial development, he said.

PARKING BAN

Ironically, the promise of healthy commercial growth near North Douglas came at a time when numerous Saanich city merchants are faced with lack of customers because of a parking ban imposed in connection with the recent Douglas Street beautification project.

HANDFUL OF BLOKS

Douglas Street, it seems, will not become another Kingsway, and the hand of plenty will be just east of Douglas in a handful of blocks linking the Town-and-Country and Mayfair shopping centres. Saanich municipal planner Anthony Parr said he has no doubt the two centres will be linked with stores.

LOT OF LAND

"There's a lot of land on the east side of Douglas ripe for development. Once the traffic pattern is established at the Mayfair shopping centre, this will be valuable property."

MORE GOING UP

Capital Region Planning Board director Anthony Roberts said: "There will be more commercial development going up in that area, but it will tend to be the drive-in type of commerce."

KASHER ACCESS

To remain prosperous in the face of stiff competition from the shopping centres the downtown area must provide easier access to the heart of the city, more parking space and pedestrian malls, he said.

Salty Plane Engine Lifted from Ocean

A salt-soaked aircraft engine was picked up yesterday by the deep sea dragger Elvin S. between Albert Head and William Head.

The engine, picked up from 45 fathoms, will be examined today by military officials.

It is believed to be of Second World War vintage.

The 60-foot trawler was skippered by Herbert Smith of Victoria.

Tree Bears Motor

"Officer, you probably won't believe this but there's a motor hanging in a tree on Shelbourne Street," said the lady who telephoned the police station.

"Oh?" replied the constable, raising his eyebrows.

As it turned out the call was no rib.

The investigating constable found the owner of the motor had used the tree to lift the machine out of his car.

Police pointed out that the motor was not in keeping with the area's scenery and the amateur mechanic took it down.

'An Interesting Fellow'

By DON GAIN

"Master Gunner of St. James' Park" General Sir Robert Mansergh, GCB, KBE, MC, made an impressive entrance to Victoria yesterday, bearing messages from the Queen.

"Our Captain General who is, of course, Her Majesty The Queen, instructed me before I left, to inform you she takes a very great interest in you. She further instructed me to give you her good wishes and she said she was pleased with the close tie-up between the gunners of Britain and the gunners of Canada," the general told units of the 5th (B.C.) Independent Medium Battery, Royal Canadian Artillery, following the inspection yesterday afternoon at Bay Street Armouries.

The tall dignified general

showed his soldierly bearing in a pukka inspection and then displayed his warmth in his talk to the men.

He lauded them for the time and effort they put into their training on their own time.

"Your wives and mothers

contribute, too," he said. "They make a contribution through every man on the parade ground."

His message for the future was to go out to meet it. "Look ahead," he said. "Go to the moon if you like, but take the tradition of the Royal Regiment along with you."

Sir Robert told of visiting Canadian gunners in Germany. "I was due somewhere else at three o'clock. At 5:30 I was still with them," he said.

And that is the way it was yesterday. He spent over an hour with the young cadet gunners in their mess.

"The general told me the parade was very good," said cadet James Cox, Jr., 13, of 1207 Duke. The cadet's father, Mr. James Cox, has been with the 5th regiment since 1940.

Cadet Rod Kathrena, 19, of 2519 Fernwood, had a talk with the Master Gunner and found him "quite an interesting fellow."

"Not stuffy, very easy to talk to" was the reaction of Robert Lewis, 19, 356 St. Charles.

'We'll Still Have Gunners Firing Rockets, Missiles'

"We will still have gunners," was the reply of the master gunner, General Sir Robert Mansergh, when asked what effect the weapons of the future would have on the role of the gunner.

"We will still have rocket weapons," he said, "and in the firing of rockets and other missiles there are duties for gunners. I have been visiting units which are using new weapons and I still regard them as gunners."

"And there will still be a master gunner," he concluded.

PHONE FUN: And then there's the city businessman—no names, no hurt feelings—who has a bright way of getting rid of long-winded telephone callers. If they won't take a polite hint he's busy, this businessman waits until he is talking and then gently cuts himself off. The psychology behind it is that people who like to talk just won't believe someone would cut himself off in the middle of a word. It works, too.

GOOD NEWS: That family social and recreation club planned by Dolphin Recreation's Art Knight should be able to get good rates for fire insurance—Sancier's No. 3 fireball is in one corner of the site. Purchase of the land was completed yesterday for an undisclosed sum. The 17-acre site is at the corner of Shelbourne Street and Baby Road, abutting the Victoria Union city campus.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?: Interesting item came to light last night about a Swedish migrant named Nels Anton Anderson who came to Canada years ago. Mr. Anderson decided his name was too common so he changed it. He's now known as Nels Anton Smith and he lives at 614 Athol. Story was told by Mr. Anderson's Smith's son, Nels Smith, 12, Goldstream.

WILL POWER: Heard yesterday of a city insurance man who makes his contacts by offering to grow up a will for someone. He describes himself as a retired bank man aged—er, I he might well be—and his agreement to be done is as his Bay Street good done for the day. All sorts to do up a will. He has to know whether or not the person has any children.

Scores Line Up For Seat Belts

Dr. W. Billingmyer, who is an intern at St. Joseph's emergency ward, was one of the more than 100 people who had seat belts installed in their cars yesterday by three car clubs working together at the vacant Fyfe Cleaners' lot on Douglas Street.

More than 100 belts were sold by the Mystics, Roadsters and Quarter-Miler car clubs, who also installed many belts which had been purchased elsewhere.

Many people who have been putting off buying the belts are taking advantage of the car clubs' free installation offer.

Mrs. K. McKenzie, of 355 Broadway, who bought five belts, one for each member of her family, said she has been planning to buy them for some time, but the free installation offer made it a lot easier.

CLOSE CALLS

Mrs. Beverly Phillips, of 2814 Inlet, is having the belts installed because she and her husband have had a few close calls in their car, and this makes the odds a little bit more in their favor.

The clubs will repeat the offer today and every weekend until the demand falls off, a club spokesman said yesterday.

In the event of rain, the installations will be done at Mooney's Body Shop, 837 View Street.

Art Loan Monday

A picture loan will be held Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the Greater Victoria Art Gallery at which several new pictures will be on view and available for rental.

Poor weather, which hampered the search for a missing Victoria pilot and his aircraft yesterday, may once again set the over the area where he is feared down today.

Airsea rescue officials said there was little hope for an improvement in the weather. The missing pilot is Erwin Johnston of Cresswell Road near Sidney.

He took off from Castlegar at 9:48 a.m. Thursday bound for Victoria with 4½ hours fuel in his light aircraft, and was last heard from when he reported his position over Princeton and asked for a weather report at 10:35 a.m.

GREETINGS to VICTORIA
TRIALS of a BOATMAN

By PROF. F. G. C. WOOD

On Page 14

By JOHN MAGOR

We have read a great deal in the past few months about what was going on here in Victoria a hundred years ago, but what about the rest of Canada, and the rest of the world?

What was the state of affairs in the United States, in England, and in Europe? It was a world very different from our present one in many ways, and pretty much the same in many others. Things we take for granted were unheard of then, and things then taken for granted are now unknown. It's mostly the things that have changed rather than people.

Let us imagine ourselves living here in Victoria in 1862. What goes on in the rest of Canada, or I should say, rather, in Canada? British Columbia was not a part of Canada—and not a few old-timers in 1962 still speak of going to Canada when they head east. In 1862 there was no railway across the continent either in the United States or in Canada.

The first trans-continental link, between Omaha and San Francisco, was not opened till 1869. The buffalo still roamed the plains in millions, the Indians still hunted them, and were not yet "civilized" by any means. Horse stealing raids, war games, and the whiskey traders were still their main pre-occupation, and there were no reservations except "back East." The North West Mounted Police were not yet organized, and the Hudson's Bay Company still held Rupert's Land.

Confederation still lay in the future and British Columbia didn't come in till 1871. Alaska still belonged to Russia, and B.C. was still using its own postage stamps.

Lord Monck had assumed office as Governor-General of Canada in 1861, and Ottawa had been declared the capital in 1858. Gold had been discovered in Nova Scotia in 1861, but that didn't mean much out here; we had gold of our own to look after. Moreover there was quartz gold, and not so easy to mine as our placer gold. A man could still be imprisoned for debt. A militia of 5,000 men and 3,000 reservists was organized for the defence of Canada in 1863. Lamps still burned various animal and vegetable oils for the most part; the use of kerosene oil for lamps started in Germany in 1857, but was not in general use for some years after.

War in the States

In the United States, civil war was raging. It began in April 1861 after many preliminary rumbles, and continued till May 1865. Its total cost has been estimated at 680,000 men and $15,000,000,000. President Lincoln had already called for thousands of volunteers and in 1862 he called for 300,000 more, with a broad hint of "or else." In the same year he proclaimed officially the abolition of slavery. The U.S. public debt amounted to what was then an almost incredible $1,222,000,000.

Idaho was not yet a Territory, much less a state. Washington became a territory in 1853 and a state in 1889; Montana became a territory in 1864 and a state in 1889. California was already producing her own wine and sent a stock of healthy vines to Italy where many had been killed by infectious diseases. John B. Stetson made his first hat in 1862.

In Mexico the political situation was just about as unusual as usual. They were engaged in a sort of mixed up war with Spanish, British, French, and Mexican troops all joining in. Communications were poor, so a defeat or victory in one area was unknown to all the others in the game, and so plans and tactics once decided on were rendered useless. It was pretty much like an "Adult Western" on television, one in which the plot is so involved that the horses can't follow it. Mexican taxes were increased 25 percent this year, too, and that did little to brighten things.

WARS PLAGUED THE NATIONS

By
DOUGLAS LEECHMAN

Across the Atlantic, Ireland was in trouble. There was great distress and famine. Secret societies sprang up, were suppressed, their members arrested, and new secret societies were organized. The Orangemen were active in politics and their demonstration in Belfast in September ended up in destructive riots. The agrarian troubles led to murders and mutilations.

France Looked East

France was extending her colonial empire. Six provinces of Cochinchina were ceded to her, and she signed a treaty of peace with Annam, and declared war on Mexico. In the manufacturing districts of France there was great distress because the Civil War in the United States had disrupted trade, especially in cotton. The Franco-German war of 1870 was still in the future.

Holland was having trouble with its low-lying lands. There had been great floods in 1861 when 40,000 acres were under water and 30,000 people rendered destitute. In 1862 Holland abolished slavery in the Dutch West Indies.

Germany was busy with the confederation of her many minor states into a single nation led by Prussia. They had decided to build a fleet, and their first national shooting match was held this year. Already the idea of the domination of Europe by force was in their minds.

Italy also was engaged in federation of her many small states and had held the first parliament in 1861 after Garibaldi's victory at Volturno. Victor Emmanuel was declared King and, while these political manoeuvres were going on, the new railway line between Rome and Naples was opened.

Poland was ill at ease. There had been a reign of terror in Warsaw the year before, with oppressive regulations on such things as clothing. In the following year military conscription without notice was introduced. Russian influence was strong, with Warsaw in a state of siege and great unrest everywhere in the land.

Russia, in 1861, had magnanimously decreed the total emancipation of all serfs, about 23,000,000 of them, in two years' time. It never came off, of course. The people were restless and discontented and the government, apparently feeling that too much knowledge was a dangerous thing, suppressed various educational institutions. This year, too, Russia celebrated her one thousandth anniversary at Nizhny Novgorod. Trial by jury was introduced, and a reorganization of the department of justice was ordered.

In the Balkans, there was war between Turkey and Serbia. Turkey, short of funds, considered the confiscation of the property of the monasteries, which they estimated at about $15,000,000.

Down in Egypt, Monsieur Ferdinand de Lesseps was busily digging away at the Suez Canal. Work on it had been started in 1859 and the canal was opened in 1869. Its cost was put at about $24,000,000.

In India Lord Elgin was installed as Governor-General and Viceroy at Calcutta. He had previously been the enormously popular Governor-General of Canada. At this time, India was being plagued by a series of severe famines caused for the most part by crop failures. Cotton planting was introduced and became a rival of indigo as a cash crop.

War in China

In China, civil war was raging. English and French embassies had been established in Peking in 1861 and Major (later General) Charles Gordon was brought in to help the imperial government to defeat the rebels. This was known as the Taiping rebellion.

Japan was emerging from her centuries of seclusion, and signing treaties with European countries and the United States. She sent envoys abroad to visit the heads of various nations and they carried with them artists who made sketches of many things they saw that were new to them. They made detailed notes of anything of possible military importance. One sketch among many that have been preserved shows a typical bedroom in a New York hotel, complete to the furniture under the bed.

Australia was first crossed from sea to sea in 1862. Burke and Wills had died in an earlier attempt and their bodies were found and brought out in 1863 and a large public funeral did honor to their efforts. The great Australian gold rush of 1851 to 1861 was about over. An

Amateur Skippers Heed Everyone's Advice

(O) f all the things involved in moving residence from the mainland to Vancouver Island, nothing theoretically should be easier than bringing over the family boat. There is no packing or crating to do, no problems with transportation companies, no getting things sorted out at the other end. For any seaworthy boat it is a routine journey from port to port. You leave a dock on one side and arrive at a dock on the other.

In my case, however, getting the boat over has been a terrible ordeal which I relate in the generous spirit of making other boat-owners feel better about their own minor problems.

My boat is 20 feet long, with twin outboard motors and of a construction virtually made for water like the Strait of Georgia. When the occasion came early this summer to move from Vancouver to Duncan, I had no worries whatsoever about making the trip.

There was just one thing—I was new to the boating crowd and had never had my craft, the Kona, out of the water. So certain alleged friends warned me that before going on such an important journey, I should make sure everything was shipshape underneath.

To humor them, more than anything else, I had the boat brought ashore. Obviously there was nothing to worry about. There was a bit of green steam on the bottom, and a little loose paint, but nothing that looked like a problem.

DON'T GO NEAR THE WATER

However, my friends were again on hand with advice. They decided that since the hull was fiberglass I should use an anti-fouling composition made specially for the purpose. But first of all, of course, the bottom had to be well scraped and sandpapered.

To my lasting regret they talked me into it. Armed with the necessary equipment and fighting off claustrophobia, I squeezed under the boat and there commenced my trial.

With the first scrape several inches of apparently good paint fell off with the loose stuff and the devastation continued until the bottom looked as if it had been subjected to a particularly rough postage. The situation was further complicated by the fact that most of the flaking paint found its way into my eyes and nose, leaving me in a watery, unwholesome condition.

I tried wearing a transparent plastic bag over my head but was defeated by shortage of breath, apart from my own and the realization it's all very well for a captain to go down with his ship but not under it.

Putting on the new paint was easier, though slippery, and eventually I emerged soaked but no longer in a state of affairs at the bottom of my boat.

In such cases, I learned, it is the friendly custom among boating people to pretend there is no problem. I made a critical examination of what some other fellow is doing to his craft. Next to me was a young chap who was apparently beginning what I had just completed. (One thing was different, however. He was using a sticky substance I had never seen before.)

"Is your boat fiberglass?" I asked him nervously.

"Oh, sure," he said, as if no other kind had ever been made.

"Well, what's that you're using?" I pressed on.

"Oh, this is a water. You have to put it on

CECIL CLARK writes to a Seattle Boat Owner . . .

LITTLE VESSEL SAW

Dear Mr. Curtis:

As we are strangers to one another, perhaps an apology is in order for making your acquaintance in this somewhat public fashion. As you read on, however, I'm sure you won't mind thousands of other people reading it with you. After all, you've become part of the story, so I think you owe it to them!

A few weeks ago, as my friend Frank Nickols idled his cruiser Romany Spirit against a Tachum Harbor float, and I was readying a line, a/t, I had to do a double take when I glimpsed the Lady Royal at the next float. Funny how a name stirs memories.

Immediately I thought of John and Marna Noble, but enquiry showed they'd retired to some outlandish spot at the top end of the Gulf of Georgia. The new owner, I was told, was a W. H. Curtis of Seattle, described on the waterfront as a retired aircraft and electronics engineer. In fact one member of the red lead and caulking hammer fraternity went so far as to say you were a genius! But then you know how people talk.

I suppose by now you've satisfied yourself, by your trip to Alaska, that you have a stout little ship, and being feminine gender she naturally has vital statistics. Perhaps for the benefit of the boat minded we should mention them.

Sixty-two feet over all, I'm told, with 15-foot beam, and a nine-foot draught, which should make her about 50 tons gross. The new power plant, I understand, is a GM product, that pushes her along at a brisk 11 knots.

These basic details you of course know; but there are perhaps other details you don't know.

Built as Trawler

To begin with she was a trawler built by Bob Jackson and his sons in the little fishing village of Brixham, overlooking Torbay on England's soft and lovely Devonshire coast. If you don't know the spot, it was here nearly 400 years ago that the men of Brixham, armed against invasion, watched high-pooped galleons captured from the harried Spanish armada being ferreted into the anchorage. Captured by the way by one of their county kinsfolk, Francis Drake.

Later I suppose, these Brixhamites passed from their boat building glimpse the outgoing sails of the London Company's ships heading for the New World to establish Jamestown. Later still, they probably heard from some packing wagoner of the departure of the Mayflower from nearby Plymouth.

It was on Brixham's beach, by the way, that William of Orange landed with 15,000 troops; a sort of invasion by invitation. You'll have to quiz some of your Irish friends to gauge the significance of the event.

All this adds up to the fact that the men of Brixham have been boatbuilders from away back, and in the past 150 years the Brixham trawler was their best effort. Biggest of the craft were styled "Mumble-bees", the smaller ones "Mules". Don't ask me why. Yours, by the way, is a "Mule".

Marine experts have given the opinion that the Brixham trawler, under sail, was equal of the world's best in heavy weather and the world's best in their book meant the pilot boats of Normandy and the Lunenburg schooner.

Perpetual Challenge

Unfortunately, since the last war, the sails have disappeared from Brixham's trawlers. Now they're motor driven. Which means, my dear sir, that you are the owner of an original Brixham trawler, built in the heyday of sail, a type that could stay on the fishing grounds in a full gale with a standard crew of three men and a boy! and for fun, race once a year for the trawlers' King George Perpetual Challenge Cup.

In one of these old-time races that saw scores of heeling craft scudding over the 40-mile course, only two minutes and seven seconds separated the winner from the last boat over the line!

Lady Royal's first owners appeared just after the First World War, when the British Navy cut its establishment to the bone. Three officers thus suddenly beached acquired her for $10,000 to go fishing commercially. At the launching they named her, with typical English whimsy, "We Dree", somehow meant to convey "We Three".

The fishing venture didn't turn out so well, so "We Dree" passed into the hands of a wealthy but somewhat eccentric English lady. Let's leave it at that while we explore Lady Royal's history from another angle, snippets of which you've probably heard.

'Life with Wilson'

It was in the late 20's that Edward Wilson, a white-haired little bearded Eurasian, formed a cultist colony on De Courcy Island, one of our gulf islands, styling the setup "The Aquarian Foundation". I won't bore you with all the details of "Life with Wilson" for it's been written about many times.

Anyway, through the instrumentation of his "come on" literature, Wilson, as chief swami, attracted moneyed disciples from far and wide. As they joined the colony they apparently shed their inhibitions and their common sense with their money. By the rules Wilson was in charge of both souls and cash. The few who objected to the spartan life were told they had failed to pass the testing period and were banished, minus their contributions.

The testing process—plenty of hard work without reward—meant also filling a warehouse with bottled and canned food against the near approach of the preordained day when, according to Wilson, catastrophe would depopulate the world. Only the faithful on De Courcy were assured of survival, for Wilson had the "word".

Black Magic

He got all this information when once in the past his subliminal self managed to penetrate the spirit world, there to discover that the universe was governed by a Board of Directors, a brotherhood of 11 famous men. So taken with Wilson were the Brothers, that they voted him a place on the Board . . . as the 12th Brother. It's as Brother 12 he's still remembered.

In odd moments Wilson dabbled in black magic and once claimed he could "sever the etheric and physical bodies of his enemies"—by remote control.

He used a practice for hours trying to kill off B.C.'s Attorney-General Harry Pooley at 73-mile range. Pooley had cast an enquiring eye on the curious group.

Brother 12 even tried to teach this bit of voodooism to disciple Roger Painter, one midnight in the cabin of the Lady Royal. Painter, a one-time poultry king of Florida, who had handed over thousands to Wilson, told of the incident in a Nanaimo courtroom.

Eventually, by the aid of a small sawmill, the island retreat blossomed with houses, a diesel tug was acquired, and sheds and warehouses went up. They built a school and a teacher was even imported from Switzerland. Looking it over once I thought the desks all singularly vacant, until I recollected the cultists were all around 50!

Early in the game the spirit-guided Wilson looked about for a consort. At first I think it was Alma, a Scottish girl he inveigled into his double-locked "House of Mystery". Then came Martie, who went out of her mind. Finally it was the widow Mabel, a brunette, tall and olive-skinned—met by chance on a train from Chicago—whom Wilson instantly declared to be a re-incarnation of Isis; because he just happened to be Osiris at that moment.

Vampire Complex

Mabel, it seems, had a vampire complex to start with, if you like, and as it turned out, a longshoreman's command of language. That summer on the island she strung the salal-fringed trails in violent-hued silk pajamas, occasionally giving the lowly, hard-working colonists equally violent-hued pieces of her mind.

Eventually Wilson, on another trip to the spirit world, discovered he'd been again re-incarnated. This time he was an early-day Spanish navigator and he became Amiel de Valdez. Spiffy Mabel was transformed into Zura de Valdez, Madame Zoe to her common-law playmate.

As Wilson continued to bank the individual goodwill offerings (ranging occasionally between $10,000 and $20,000) he found himself the possessor of a hatful of money. Someone once figured it to be about $400,000.

He Loved the Sea

Now croak, divine or would-be answer, whatever Wilson was or wasn't, one thing was certain. He had a great love of the sea, and was a real deep-water sailor. In fact, at times in his career he'd been an officer in the merchant ships. He could handle any class of boat and was no mean hand at design. I've seen some of his plan and models.

. . . About the Sturdy "Lady Royal"

GREAT ADVENTURES

In 1929 he and Zura took off for England. There he bought the Boxham trawler "We Dree", changing its name to "Lady Royal", perhaps in compliment to the black-eyed Zura.

Some say he smooth-talked the English woman into donating the boat to the Aquarian Foundation. I wouldn't put it past him.

From England he sailed his acquisition through the Bay of Biscay to the Canary Islands, then with stops at Antigua and Jamaica, came through the Canal and up the coast. This was all sail, no power.

There were rumors that when he finally dropped anchor in his little De Courcy island harbor, where he could only get in and out at high tide, packages of contraband were stealthily carried ashore and buried, later to be ferried over to Vancouver Island at the winking invitation of nocturnal car headlights. This, I think, was his wishful thinking for, although De Courcy was his first landfall, awaiting him there to search the vessel was a customs officer from Nanaimo and a B.C. police sergeant. I got this from the sergeant, Jack Russell.

The legend of Brother 12's secret cache of loot, however, was born to kill, and over the years kept cropping up.

No Treasure

When Capt. Nantes owned the "Lady Royal" he suspected that the concrete blocks that formed ballast might have currency imbedded in them. He broke them open, but they were disappointingly solid.

If the colonists enjoyed a breather while the dictatorial Wilson and his sadistic lady friend were abroad, when they returned, they found the holiday over. Finally came rebellion, and while the faithful were telling a Nanaimo judge of their difficulties, Wilson saw the writing on the wall and took off to Switzerland with Madame Zee. He died there a few years later, the watch dog Mabul at his side. We often wondered if she garnered all the loot.

Before he departed for abroad, however, and while the lawsuit went on, Wilson paid a last visit to the momentarily deserted island settlement, there to vent his spite by breaking up furniture, shooting the water tanks full of holes, and finally trying to dynamite the "Lady Royal". In this, however, he reckoned without the staunchness of her build (or else he wasn't very good with dynamite) for he only succeeded in putting a small hole in the hull below the waterline.

And speaking of her staunchness, did you know that her 5½-inch oak frames were pickled for years deep under the Turbay beach before being used?

After the court action the sadder and wiser colonists dispersed, and only the two biggest contributors (both women) remained in possession of the property.

Meanwhile, down in the bay tides rose and fell on the carved hull of the once proud "Lady Royal", as for months she gathered barnacles to the tide mark, and blistered and curled paint on her upperworks.

In Good Hands

Eventually, so the story goes, a Mr. Coulson of Cowichan Bay bought her with the idea of converting her into a floating machine shop to follow the fishing fleet. Apparently this fell through, for in 1938 retired British army captain, William Gerald Nantes, veteran of the South African and First World War, took her over.

Capt. Nantes spent three years and considerable money in completely reconditioning the "Lady Royal" as a comfortable, all-weather sailing yacht. Final touch was a complete suit of tan sails ordered specially from Glasgow.

Below decks the main saloon was lined with mahogany salvaged from the famous old CPR liner, Princess Patricia, which shuttled between Nanaimo and Vancouver 40-odd years ago. The lamps even reflected another coastal memory; they were off the old hydrographic ship "Lillooet". In addition a tiny fireplace in the saloon had once been in the wardroom of the old British navy ship of war, "Algerine", which, 52 years ago, was in at the birth of the Canadian navy.

These little touches showed the kind of interest which governed Capt. Nantes in the refit.

The work finished, he had a mind to voyage across the Pacific with his wife and 18-year-old son, Norman, but the outbreak of the Second World War shelved this, and a couple of years later he died. At his request his ashes were scattered on the Gulf of Georgia from the deck of the "Lady Royal".

Another Owner

It was in October, 1942, that Tom Noble, retired mining engineer of Quathuski Cove, acquired the Lady Royal, and a few years later when one of his three sons fell victim to polio while an airline pilot, Mr. Noble turned the boat over to young John thinking the activity would help his recovery. At first, as John once told me, he found it tough even getting aboard, but in time the therapy worked. Eventually, with the Lady Royal converted to tuna fishing, he and his wife, Marna, took after the albacore, in sweeps that took them from the Queen Charlotte to the coast of Mexico. At times they were the only Canadians in the huge operation south of San Diego.

However, if the fishing was unpredictable, at least John recovered his health. After that Lady Royal was chartered to the federal government on seasonal survey work.

Finally along came Mr. Curtis of Seattle, and the story is up to date: a story I had to tell late to you for, in acquiring the Lady Royal, you got more than a vessel. You got also a link with the hardy fisherfolk of the coast of Devon—not to speak of the sea-going witch doctor, a grackles old school army officer, and a young air lines pilot.

That you may have good luck and pleasant weather in all your cruising free from any left-over spells, charms or other wizardry, is the sincere wish of Vivienne Chadwick writes about . . .

"I live by it and with it and on it and in it," said the Water Rat. "It's brother and sister to me, and aunts and company, and food and drink, and (naturally) washing. It's my world. . . ."

And a beautiful one, too, probably, seeing that Kenneth Grahame's enchanting "Wind In the Willows" is set in England, that land of lovely rivers. The lower reaches of the Fraser can't lay much claim to beauty, perhaps, though at least one channel winds between greenery almost to the mouth, but it's a world to a lot of people—to the fishermen, and to the tug-boat men who wet-nurse the cargo ships, who haul great snowloads of endless commodities or debris, and who dump, in early dawn, the thousands of logs which line this waterway. Quite a spell-binding operation, this last, when watched for the first time, and one which involves a highly satisfying perfection of teamwork.

We chugged smoothly out of our quiet backwater a mile or two below the Patullo Bridge, three of us on the cruiser Wagadugu (My fault, that, but a pleasing word. It grows on you.) Outward bound, we were, on a weekend holiday. In the young opalescent morning the river seemed to sleep. Ahead of us a tug rested at anchor, its tow a large piled into a great pyramid of logs, on the top timber of which a gull dived. Nothing moved.

Suddenly, motivated by some obscure cause—a striking clock, a high point of tide, a finished cup of coffee—four sharp whistles sounded, and at once the dreaming river erupted into furious, efficient life.

A smaller black and white tug swept round from where she had been hidden, tied up to the far side of the larger vessel, and made for the stern of the barge, and at the same moment a shabby little inboard shot out from close to shore, towing a sort of floating fence of logs, which the black and white tug picked up. They both stood by. Simultaneously, a third, fat little tug came steaming smartly down river with the business-like air of a housewife on her way to a butcher from whom she intends to stand no nonsense. Considering her size, the wake she piled up was sheer swank. She, too, stood off the stern of the barge, and out of nowhere a bright red motorboat appeared beside her. On the big tug a half a dozen figures suddenly showed, took up key positions, and waited. Everybody waited. Me too.

Because slowly, inexorably, the tremendous barge was beginning to sink beneath its load!

Flooded inside, along the shoreward edge, it tilted further and further, until the law of gravity seemed impossibly, unbearably defied—and at last, with a thunderous roar, the mighty sticks crashed down and the river exploded in spray.

The seagull sailed from his roost, screaming treachery and outrage.

THE LOGS TOSSED and plunged, the lightened barge shot upward and away to the end of its cable, and the black and white tug was off like a racer with her fence enclosing the rolling mass of timber. The shabby little inboard was right behind her. She picked up the fence again, towed it into shallow water and secured it. The red motorboat's chime was to rattle up and down outside the fence like a sheepdog, nudging the whole thing into a neat compact arrangement out of the way of traffic.

In the meanwhile the fat tug was riding herd on the empty barge. She brought it back to the stern of the towing tug, which, anchor up and ready, promptly went off with it, and the fat tug, having settled the butcher, swept round in a tight circle and went home. The black and white tug, the red motorboat, the shabby little inboard, had all disappeared. Eighteen minutes since the whistles sounded. . . . And the seagull settled again, sulkily, on a piling and went back to sleep. A nightmare, perhaps, or something he ate?

TUCKED AWAY behind the breakwater at the mouth of the river's northerly arm is a little basin known as Coward's Cove. So named, it seems, because the more timorous souls who poke their noses out into the straits only to find the chop a bit too much for them, promptly turn around and scurry back behind the rocky barrier, waiting for the wind to drop. Likewise, those heading inland too soon for the helping tide can tie up to the booms here until the turn, or nose into the piled up bank of sand—a good spot for restless children and dogs to stretch their legs and paddle.

at the dock

SOCIAL CONTACTS afloat, one notices, always seem much more vital than those effected during land travel. Securing at the government dock on Bowen Island, we found ourselves involved in a serious dilemma. Five or six young lads had caught a large crab, an extremely annoyed and active one, which threatened their bare toes with powerful and hostile pincers. What to do with it? Was it big enough to keep legally? If so, who would cook it?

They offered it to us, and legal or not we would have accepted like a shot but for the fact that my idiot child had brought along one and only one cook pot, slightly less than six inches across, in which we found we must boil potatoes, clean our teeth, bathe, and rinse the salt spray from the windows.

While the crab's fate was being discussed, one of the boys gave a running commentary on its internal construction and its habits, based on his biology class work, which appeared to do little for the general appetite for shellfish. In the end it was decided to send the creature home, but as it was too mad to co-operate and as nobody was willing to pick it up bare-handed, it was eventually freed by one of the boys reeling it into a bubbling rage with a rope's end, which it snatched and hung on to just long enough to be swung overboard. A pity. Fresh crab salad is hard to beat. . . .

IN THE SHALLOWS of one of the island coves a small boat, or what was left of one, sat on rotting timbers. It was blackened fore and aft, and fire had demolished the stern. But someone, we saw, had named her "Dublin Trouble", so what could you expect? And in the ensign socket forward was stuck an empty beer bottle. Not a dignified finish for any craft.

ONE OF THE BEST MOMENTS on any cruise surely, is the pre-dinner rest and refreshment hour. You've fished, you've explored, you've battled the slop, perhaps, you've taken your tricks at the wheel and shined up the windows and the brightwork, and now, having picked your quiet anchorage, you can settle down with your glass of whatever, and appreciate the peace of your surroundings: the effect of a lowering sun on red-gold arbutus, the reflections in the millpond water.

But, like a lovely garden menaced with cutworm and earwig, your serenity is subject to threat. Suddenly there is a blasting roar, and the moron mariner, the speedboat boom going nowhere but getting there with wide-open throttle, rips the stillness to ribbons. He has never heard of the two-knots-in-moorage custom; he has never heard of manners at all. The resting boats plunge and rock, banging against pilings or boom. You can visualize the crashing glassware and china where those below are preparing the evening meal. One skipper snatches up a megaphone and sends a furious demand to slow down across the no-longer quiet water. Another bellows an invitation for the circling idiot to come back within shotgun range. This is an appealing thought. . . . It would presumably be open season at all times for game such as this, with a substantial bounty

Kate, Bess, Scotty and Red are a Great Team

Thirty-four years ago on the 2,400-acre prairie farm of James Wyatt near Vulcan, Alberta, Kate was born, a Clydesdale foal.

She was the first of what was to become the oldest four-horse team in the world, and one which has continuously worked together. Their ages today total 125 years—28 of these working years. The others in the team are Bess, Clydesdale mare, 31; Scotty and Red each aged 30. Scotty and Red are Clyde-Percheron geldings.

By FRANCIS DICKIE

The mares are from the same dam, different sires. It's a curious fact that neither produced mares.

The geldings are from the same sires, different dams.

The remarkable team worked together on the James Wyatt farm for 14 years. In those young days of their lives they plowed, drew binders, hauled grain, barley, wheat, oats and hay to market. They worked from eight to ten hours a day during their first 20 years. In those times, before the increasing use of farm machinery, a 16-horse team did long grain hauls. The four were leaders of such teams.

In the spring of 1945, James Wyatt left the 2,400 acres at Vulcan, his brother continuing there, and moved to the present 2,800-acre Wyatta Ranch near High River, Alberta. Here he raised wheat, oats, barley, hay.

However, in 1941 he transferred out into pure-bred prize stock Herefords, now numbering 20. In 1942 he bred Appaloosa horses. Both projects proved so popular that buyers now come from all over Canada. Today he has a breeding stock of 65 Appaloosas. He has exhibited extensively at leading fairs in Canada.

He is particularly proud of a two-horse team which, in the autumn of 1951, won the Pulling Contest at the Millerville Fair.

But Mr Wyatt speaks with greatest pride and affection about his veteran four-horse team.

"Bess has always been the best lead horse. She was outstanding in those early days of the long grain haul when 16 horses were used. In the bush Scotty was notable for his intelligence in skidding work. The four were always good natured, getting along well together. The mares I have always placed in the same stall, and the geldings have theirs.

"Those long working days on the Vulcan farm are happily a thing of the past for this team," he said. "Farmers, as well as horses, thanks to marvellously improved machinery, no longer have to endure that wearing toil of earlier days when men first homesteaded the Canadian prairies. Today on my farm I have three binders, four tractors, three row cultivators, two rubber-tired wagons, one 24-run drill, one threshing machine . . .

"And because of them, Kate, Bess, Scotty and Red have long ceased the heavy labor of their earlier days. I use them at times for light hauls. I'll until last year they drew the binder for a few days. The remarkable thing about them is that they show hardly any trace of their advanced age, so far beyond the average life span. The proof of this you can see by looking at the photograph taken last August. They look like young horses.

"However, I am now retiring them. In the future they can loaf in pasture in summer, warm comfortable stables in winter. I will watch how they react to leisure. In some men retirement without work, I know, hasn't proved a good thing. I hope it won't affect my old horses that way, and they will continue to live happily many more years as part of my family."

RAPTUROUS HOLIDAY

in boat, and the privilege of mounting the prey's best number on a plaque in one's game room. Certainly, few pests outside the cougar and the rattlesnake have acquired more unpopularity with the outdoor brotherhood.

Of another calibre entirely was the pleasant gentleman in the small Chriscraft who took advantage of our broader beam to follow a few yards astern of us while we crossed a rough bit of open water to Gibbon's Landing. When we pulled in to the pumps to refuel and take on water, he made a point of stopping and hailing us.

"Thanks for breaking up the chop for me," he called. "Much obliged. Have a nice time!"

What a difference a little courtesy makes.

Making back up the river a few days later, in the late afternoon, we met the parade of seiners, scores of them, heading out to sea. And then, ahead of us and over near the bank, a lone fisherman sitting in a mule, drifting out board. As we neared him, he straightened up and watched us intently. I happened to be at the wheel, and I was, I thought, giving him plenty of room and not disturbing his fish, but all at once he jumped to his feet, to the imminent danger of an upset craft, and began to bounce and shout. An excitable type, I thought. Must have hooked something larger than usual. It wasn't till my son-in-law shouted, too, that I saw, low in the water, the dirty little flag, the same muddy grey-brown as the river, that marked the far end of the net I was about to slide into. At the last moment we swept safely, gracefully, around it, and the terrified man subsided.

He was the first of dozens. They thickened as we progressed upstream. They're allowed, I was told, to rig their nets part way across the river two days out of seven, and as some pick one side and some the other, pretty soon the traveller finds himself doing a sort of skier's slalom around the flags. And as vessels coming down the river are faced with the same problem, and as they frequently don't declare themselves as to which side of you they mean to pass until the last minute, the traffic takes a fair amount of concentration.

* * *

Our own little backwater soon moved at 7 p.m. And just time to be rushed to Tumbowasa, tired, rather giddy, but definitely pleased with one's self. After all, a cruiser, an outboard, a ferry, and a car ride at each end provide a nice variety of transportation to enliven the end of a rapturous holiday.

MURIEL WILSON'S "Thought for Food"

WHAT'S FOR DESSERT?

With the exception of dieters, no one needs any coaxing to eat their dessert. The original meaning of the word meant food served after the table had been cleared or "deserted" of everything else. In Europe, "dessert" still means fruit served at the end of the meal. We in this country have broadened the word to include any sweet served after the main course. Dessert by any other name would sound as sweet . . . many children, my own included, always called the dessert "Afters." It was always a disappointment if mother failed to provide that special ending.

Desserts can be simple or elegant . . . simple as a bowl of fruit, fresh or canned, or that indispensable dish of ice cream. It can be dramatic and glamorous as the famous Baked Alaska.

If there is any rule about dessert it would be to tie it in with what's gone before. A great, rich meal should be followed by a light dessert and vice versa. If the main course has been sort of skimpy or perhaps an economy dish Mother's prestige can be restored with a favorite dessert.

Today we are going to start with the "fancy." It is called Viennese Peach Tart . . . if no fresh peaches are obtainable, well drained canned peaches will do. In fact, any fruit will do.

The crust is sort of a sweet pastry made of one-half cup butter or margarine, one-quarter cup confectioner's sugar and one cup sifted enriched flour. Cream the butter until soft. Add the sugar gradually, continuing to cream. Blend in flour to make a soft dough. If it is a bit soft and crumbly don't worry. You just pat it into the pan with your fingers. This is a party-size tart, so use a 12 inch pizza pan. Bake at 350° for about 20 minutes. Cool before arranging peaches in the shell.

Now for the glaze for over the peaches . . . One tablespoon cornstarch, two tablespoons sugar, one-quarter teaspoon mace, one-half cup orange juice, one-half cup red currant or any tart red jelly, melted. Combine the cornstarch, sugar and mace. Add orange juice. Cook over hot water, stirring until thick and clear. Stir in the melted jelly. Cool slightly. Arrange peach slices in single layer in baked shell. Spoon glaze evenly over fruit. Chill. Garnish with whipped cream sweetened to your taste.

This recipe could be used for a Dessert Party. With it, of course, a brew of fine coffee. Make your coffee carefully, measuring both water and coffee accurately. Time the brewing and your coffee will be rich and fragrant . . . just the way it always is in Vienna.

Fresh pears will be on the market for quite some time yet, so why not a Pear Crumble Pie? For this we will use a regular pastry and line a nine-inch pie plate.

For the filling you will need six medium-size pears, one-half cup sugar, one teaspoon grated lemon rind, three tablespoons lemon juice. Peel, halve, core and slice pears. Toss them lightly with sugar, lemon peel and juice. Arrange this mixture evenly in the unbaked pie shell.

Now for the topping . . . One-half cup soft sugar and flour, one-half teaspoon each ginger and cinnamon, one-quarter cup butter. Mix, cutting in the butter to Sprinkle the mixture in hot oven—400°—for about 15 minutes. The pears are tender. If too much, place a pie finish cooking. Serve warm and sweetened whipped cream. Delicious pie.

Pears are lovely baked. Place in a baking dish with one-half inch of water on the bottom. Sprinkle with brown sugar and grated ginger. Or, instead of brown sugar, use some maraschino cherries. Bake in a 350° oven until the pears are tender. During the baking some steam accumulates in the pan, so warm or cold.

And here is an old-fashioned Pudding Pie (sounds like medium cooking apples). One-half teaspoon nutmeg, one-half teaspoon rolled oats, one-third grated lemon rind and one-half cup sugar. Sprinkle with the water, lemon juice and baking soda to the roller into this until crumbly. Bake 40 minutes. I made this I served it on top. There were no

DEAR HELOISE:

For years I have griped at my wife because she used all the yard tools and didn't wash and oil them before putting them away. When my wife leaves me on the garden tools . . . they rust. This burns me up.

All husbands with the same complaint: My ulcer has healed by just getting a big wooden box, filling it with sand, and working some oil into it.

When my wife gets through with the trimmer, scissors, hoe, rake, etc. . . now she sticks them in this oil-sand box, and it not only cleans the soil off but keeps them oiled as well.

DEAR HELOISE:

I wonder if women know that a little talcum powder sprinkled inside kid gloves makes them easier to put on. This is especially good when putting on long gloves for a formal occasion.

I find that it seems to help absorb the moisture that collects inside the gloves. Kid gloves are hot, you know.

Bake in a hot oven—400°—for about 45 minutes or until the pears are tender. If the topping is browning too much, place a piece of foil over the top to finish cooking. Serve warm with ginger-flavored and sweetened whipped cream. This really is a delicious pie.

Pears are lovely baked . . . Cut in half and core. Place in a baking dish with about half an inch of water on the bottom. Fill the pear centres with brown sugar and sprinkle with a little powdered ginger. Or, instead of the ginger, spoon some maraschino cherry juice over the sugar. Bake in a 350° oven until the pears are tender. During the baking spoon some of the liquid that accumulates in the pan, over the pears. Serve warm or cold.

And here is an old Irish recipe for Apple Pudding Pie (sounds Irish, doesn't it?) — Four medium cooking apples, one teaspoon cinnamon, one-half teaspoon nutmeg, two teaspoons lemon juice, one-half teaspoon baking soda, one cup rolled oats, one-third cup butter, one teaspoon grated lemon rind and one-third cup water. Pare and core the apples, slice into a greased baking dish. Sprinkle with the combined spices. Add the water, lemon juice and grated rind. Add the baking soda to the rolled oats and work the butter into this until crumbly. Spread over the apples and bake 40 minutes in a 375° oven. When I made this I served it hot with vanilla ice cream on top. There were no complaints.

The other day Jim asked, "Why don't we ever have rice pudding anymore?" Well, I don't really know, I'd forgotten about it, I guess. I'd even forgotten how to make it . . . the old-fashioned kind, I mean. We get so used to using the pre-cooked rice that we forget how good some of the old sort tastes. Well, I looked through all my recipe books (and I have a great number) but not one listed an old-fashioned, baked rice pudding. Then I thought of Mrs. Benton and sure enough there was the recipe I wanted. When you really want a change, why don't you try it?

Old Fashioned Rice Pudding . . . One cup rice, two tablespoons brown sugar, one-half a teaspoon salt, two tablespoons butter, nutmeg and a quart of milk. This would serve at least six but you can of course cut the recipe in half. Wash the rice and put it and the milk, sugar and salt in a good-sized baking dish. Cut the butter in small pieces and add. Sprinkle the top generously with nutmeg. Although it was not in the recipe I added about three-quarters of a cup of raisins. Bake in a very slow oven for one-and-a-half to two hours. During the first hour stir a few times with a fork. Serve with pouring cream.

Here is a good make ahead. It is called Orange Fluff . . . make a crumb crust with three-quarters of a cup crushed vanilla wafers, one-quarter cup chopped nuts and one-quarter cup melted butter. Line a one-quart refrigerator tray with the crumbs, being enough for a topping. Now heat 24 marshmallows (large) and half a cup of frozen orange concentrate in the top of a double boiler until the marshmallows are melted. Cool thoroughly. Fold in one-half pint of cream that has been stiffly whipped. Pile into crumb crust and sprinkle the top with remaining crumbs. Chill until nice and firm.

THE BRIDE'S CORNER

SOME QUICKIE DESSERTS . . .

Fold in one cup whipped cream to a chocolate pudding mix. Garnish with chopped nuts.

Put a pint of vanilla ice cream in a freezing tray. Pour over it one tin apricot frozen concentrate. Cut it in slightly with a knife. Refreeze.

Fold leftover crumbled macaroni, spaghetti or spaghetti cake into a soft custard. Pile into sherbet glasses and top with a fluff of whipped cream.

Broiled grapefruit . . . Cut in half, remove sections, sprinkle with brown sugar and spoon a little maraschino cherry juice or cherry over. Broil until the edges are singed. Good after a heavy meal.

If you are short of shelf space in your kitchen or live in a small apartment and need more shelves to stack canned goods, etc. . . . stack bricks or glass blocks on each of the shelves and place boards across them.

By repeating this several times, you can have as many shelves as you desire. This is most useful because most shelves are too far apart anyway and this wastes space. When you move, remove the canned goods (or whatever), then the boards and finally the blocks. Your walls won't have any nail holes and the landlord will be pleased.

TALCUM TALK

DEAR HELOISE:

To remove fresh grease or oil stains from clothing: place the garment over a flat surface such as an ironing board and sprinkle talcum powder over the spot. Work this in well with your fingers and let sit awhile; then brush out with a stiff brush. Do this BEFORE laundering.

One application will usually remove the spot. I have never found this to spot or leave a circle.

Among the "Up-and-Coming Students"

Along about last Easter — indeed, an appropriate season for this kind of thing! — a resident of Greenwood Avenue in Esquimalt was presented with a duckling. It was tiny, fluffy and cute.

Since Easter, however, in the ordinary nature of things, it has grown. It started out downy and gold in color. Later on it must have been rather like Burl Ives' famous "little white duck sitting on the water." By September it was quite enormous: an Aythya duck. I think of the type concerning which it has been unkindly said that they have more sense below their necks than above.

It would also appear that the Greenwood Avenue duck has acquired with age a strong sense of responsibility inasmuch as it carries on like the Capitoline geese of ancient Rome

By

who always warned of the approach of strangers and, apparently, loused up sneak attacks by such as the Goths and Vandals on more occasions than one. The Greenwood Avenue duck honks mightily — a baritone among birds — when its suspicions are aroused. It is also like the ducks of poet Harvey who "look at you through topaz-tinted eyes and wish you ill."

Thus, it was no more than was to be expected when the duck took loud exception to the activity involved in photographing dancer Pamela Metzger right next door. Photographer Karl Spreitz threatened the security of Greenwood Avenue: the duck said so in no uncertain terms. Pamela herself, a lifelong neighbour, was probably not so disturbing although her costume may have aggravated the duck's misgivings. A tute in the garden would be distinctly uncommon and it would take a discerning duck to account for it.

Actually, the years of Pamela's dancing career just about equal the months in the whole tempestuous life-span of the duck. Pam started serious training when she was eight years old although, even previous to that, she was, observes her mother, always flitting around.

PAM'S the BEST

Nowadays she flits to excellent purpose and with singular success. She is a proficient exponent of ballet, tap, character and modern ballet and this last commands much of her interest and attention because of the variety of it.

At the first Victoria Dance Festival in April of this year Pam tied for first place in the modern musical solos, joined Beverley Cochrane to win the 13 and under tap doubles, and was a member of a winning School of Theatrical Arts line of eight.

At the conclusion of the Theatrical Arts Revue, "April Melody," Pam was awarded the prize for the "best up and coming student."

"April Melody" was her third revue and, since then, she has participated in dance performances at the Centennial Pageant, at the Loggers' Show and at the Butchart Gardens "Sunset Shows." She was equally happy performing in such variegated items as an Indian ballet, a Calypso, a Hawaiian cabaret, a Swanee Tap Line, a Jazz-on-Point and "Rhapsody in Blue."

And, in this year of its 50th Jubilee, Esquimalt has Pam as May Queen, elected by the students in Esquimalt Junior High.

Young Miss Metzger discourses with surprising but welcome candour on the subject of her feelings and conditions when show time rolls around. One gathers that she is almost a casualty from nerves before she goes on stage and, oftentimes, "a wreck" when she comes off. Between these two rather alarming interludes — when she is actually performing — she is far too busy to analyze her own sensations, so we must, perforce, seek other sources of information and evidence.

"As soon as Pam comes on, she illuminates the stage!"

This is the opinion of an authority who knows Pam, knows the stage and has frequently noted the two together. I, for one, can accept that opinion readily. I do not recall ever seeing anyone at all who could light up and radiate charm and personality more quickly than she can. Nor do I recall ever seeing it done more naturally or less ostentatiously. It's as close to Pam as spots to measles and as inevitable as income tax. Like switching on a big, bright light, Pam turns it on and off at will, rather as if personality was not only precious but also estimated $500,000,000 worth of gold was mined, and it was at about half of today's price of $35 an ounce then. The transportation of convicts was tapering off, and bushrangers and ticket-of-leave men were giving officials plenty of trouble.

Scientific Progress

Great steps forward had been taken in the field of science since the Middle Ages, but there was still much to be learned; indeed, there still is. Electricity was being developed rapidly, especially in telegraphy and lighting. There were already about 150,000 miles of telegraph wires strung about the Old Country and other parts of the world and a new magazine, "The Electrician," had appeared in 1893. A safety electric lamp for miners was exhibited in Paris. Nevertheless, coal gas had been in use as an illuminant since 1794 and was used extensively. In 1862 London alone had 9,000 miles of gas pipe laid, and its area then was much smaller than it is now.

The automobile was not yet, though experiments had been made with various forms of road engines. A steam carriage for ordinary roads was invented in 1860. It ran at eight miles an hour at a cost of a penny a mile, and covered 114 miles in two days. Experiments had been made with primitive forms of the telephone and the typewriter, but neither of these was in practical use.

Darwin's "Origin of Species" had appeared in 1859 and did much to revolutionize scientific thought. The germ theory of disease was not generally held, though it had been hinted at, and bacteria were not actually seen and recognized as such till about 1875.

Gold and Guns

The world's supply of gold, disregarding gold still in the mines, was estimated at $2,500,000,000 in 1900, just before the California gold rush. In 1875, after the California, Australia, Fraser River, and Cariboo rushes it rose to $5,000,000,000. Much research was going on in metallurgy. Alfred Krupp cast a 21-ton ingot of steel at Essen, and aluminium-bronze was one of the new productions, an alloy of copper and aluminium, both light and strong. Breach loading guns had appeared in 1850 but were not adopted by the British government till 1866, and ironclad warships were used first in the U.S. Civil War.

One great advance brought about by the electric telegraph was the possibility of the rapid gathering of weather data from stations which were established all over the country. The science of meteorology made immediate advances and weather predictions and storm warnings were issued daily.

It was in this year that the International rule of the road at sea was first adopted, an agreement long overdue, and now made even more necessary by the great increase of trade and exploration. Dr. Livingstone was in "Darkest Africa"; he didn't come out for 16 years and marched 11,000 miles or more. Speke and Grant were working in the same general area and discovered Lake Albert Nyanza, the source of the Nile, which they named after the Prince Consort.

Though science was developing so rapidly, belief in the occult was by no means dead, and there was a great revival of interest in spiritualism in Great Britain and the United States. The Fox Sisters, Dr. Hume and, later, Sir William Crookes were all familiar names in this new, yet old, pseudo science.

Queen in Mourning

In England itself, many things were going on a hundred years ago. The Old Country was at war with Brazil. The Prince Consort had died on December 14, 1861, and Queen Victoria, who had ascended the throne in 1837, went into deep mourning. A sum of £100,000 was publicly subscribed to erect the Albert Memorial. The bank discount rate was 2½ per cent and a day laborer's weekly wage was nine shillings and sixpence, about $2.50. The income tax was reduced this year; incomes between £100 and

The Indians Gave Her a Title:

CHIEF SIM KLAUS...

Mother of the Finback Whale

*It was an auspicious occasion.
The first woman to be admitted to an all-male society was being received into the sacred cloister.*

When Mrs. Malsie (Armytage Moore) Hurley, wife of one of Canada's greatest criminal lawyers, the late Thomas Hurley, was made a "brother" of the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia, its leader, Alfred Adams said, "I would like you to teach the white people, tell them we suffer when hungry or in pain as much as they." And Mrs. Hurley has been honoring this request ever since although it has made her in turn, hated, feared, blessed and loved—but always respected—by both Indians and whites.

It was just 30 years ago that Alfred Adams, together with several other chiefs, sought refuge from a storm on the coast of the Queen Charlottes. As they sat waiting for it to abate they discussed the problems of their people—even to those of future generations. From this talk stemmed the idea of forming a native brotherhood—and its leader spent the remaining 10 years of his life travelling up and down the coast, going among his people, talking to all tribes, even those with whom his own had been enemies. He was a man who emanated quiet strength, dignity and love and he drew all tribes together that they might face with strength their common danger—the threat of extinction.

His crusade was only just in time. The Indian population had been reduced to fewer than 18,000 by the ravages of tuberculosis and by such epidemics as measles and smallpox. Unable to compete and discriminated against in the labor market, they starved. When furs were sold or traded, the amount was measured to the height of a gun. Gradually the gun barrels were made longer, and a mere pittance would be paid for the valuable goods. Thus legal robbery became the rule rather than the exception.

It seemed that in a hundred years or so the North American Indian would be extinct, the generally indifferent attitude implying that this would be just as well.

"The Native Voice"

A few months after Mrs. Hurley—Malsie to all who know her—joined the Native Brotherhood, the great Alfred Adams died, and because she had $150 in the bank, and "couldn't think of a better way of spending it," Malsie stepped in and founded an Indian newspaper—the second in the Americas—and it became the official organ of the Native Brotherhood of B.C. Its title, "The Native Voice," epitomizes the philosophy behind it. As Malsie explains, "It is the freeing of the voice of every native Canadian, giving him an outlet for his pent up feelings and working always toward recognition for him."

She was a most unlikely candidate for publisher. Knowing nothing of newspapers she plunged headlong into Indian affairs and many friends, such as George North, editor of The Fisherman, were an invaluable help. "I'm not quite sure how it has kept going for 16 years," said Malsie. "Perhaps because I was determined that it should live—something always turned up to help. Year by year it grew while other little papers died."

And The Native Voice with its six Indian associate editors in Canada and the United States is widely read and letters from all over the world arrive at the Denman Street office in Vancouver, where Malsie has been operating the paper since the death of her husband.

It is a fascinating publication. Malsie, who since childhood has lived in many areas where often her only company was that of the Indian, has always felt sympathetic toward their innate belief in the simplicity of life and appreciated their stories of birds, animals and their people.

Help from Prime Minister

It is this spiritual type of beauty that is published—and stories of their forefathers, sometimes quaintly and ungrammatically written, are often used unedited, for to correct certain phrasing would be to destroy the spirit and essence of expression.

But the fight for equality has been valiantly carried on, too, and it was a triumphantly proud February, 1960, Special Edition that held the details of Prime Minister Diefenbaker's granting to the native Indian of full citizenship rights.

"Politics apart," said Malsie, who has a deep respect for the prime minister and has often contacted him directly for help in solving some of the problems of her large adopted flock. "Mr. Diefenbaker is, I believe, the only minister since Queen Victoria's reign who has upheld her promise that her ministers would guide the people as long as the sun shone, the waters ran and the grass grew."

The Indians after so many years of disillusionment were wary of the government's intentions, and were scared of the possibility of becoming full citizens and losing identity. So, when the first provincial vote was granted, Malsie, with Mrs. Constance Cox as her interpreter, travelled the B.C. coast, teaching the tribes the meaning of the vote and what it could do for them. Her faithful efforts were recognized by many chiefs who promised that she should be given great powers. And so at one particular gathering, Chief Martha Moulton conferred on her the title of "Chief Sim Klaus"—"mother of the finback whale." It is one of the highest ranking names of the Skeena and gives her power over 14 villages.

"I Will Be Faithful"

Because the word "chief" to an Indian, and to Malsie too, means that he must be strong yet humble and serve his people—looking after the old and teaching the young.

"I will try to help you. I will fight with you. If you win, I will win. If you fail, I shall fail with you. But I will always be faithful and true to you. I want to, and must, earn this honored name."

Twelve years after the name was conferred, a feast was held—and the name confirmed.

Talk of assimilation annoys Malsie, who suggests that whites clear up their own slums, look after their own delinquents. "What have we to offer the Indian? Our mistakes and loss of faith? The Indian has attained his position today through dignity, perseverance and an unflinching belief in humanity—without use of soldiers, bombs or guns."

THE DUNSMUIR LEGEND

Some weeks ago I wondered where the Lodge at Craigdarroch Castle was situated. Old directories are somewhat confusing; one says it was on Belcher Street, which is the Rockland Avenue of today, another that it was on Fort Street.

Mrs. A. L. Young, of 2711 Tudor Avenue, sets me right, and she should know. Mrs. Young for some years lived at the Lodge of Craigdarroch when her father, George Woods, was coachman to Mrs. Robert Dunsmuir.

The Lodge was just about where the east corner of Rockland and Joan Crescent is today, next to the three-gabled, old-world house, now called "Duval" and the home of the Barnard family.

"It was a wonderful place for children to grow up," recalls Mrs. Young. "We could play in the garden, and ride our bicycles along the paths and driveways. We rarely saw Mrs. Dunsmuir, but her daughters were often there, and we children liked them very much. They brought us presents and sent us postcards from Europe."

Lavish Wedding

Mrs. Young vaguely remembers the lavish wedding at the Castle of Jessie Sophia, the sixth Dunsmuir daughter, to Sir Richard John Blugrave, an Irish baronet. She and her mother were among the guests in Christ Church Cathedral. After the church service 400 guests attended a reception in the Castle and its grounds, but it is doubtful if Mrs. Dunsmuir was there. She became more or less a recluse during her 14 years in her Castle, spending most of her time in a suite on the second floor. She took frequent drives in her carriage, with George Woods holding the reins, but in the newspapers of the era there is practically no mention of her attending social events. Her daughter-in-law, Mrs. James Dunsmuir, had taken over as reigning queen of Victoria society.

One of the fascinations of Victoria history is why there is almost complete lack of mention in local newspaper of Craigdarroch Castle when it was building. It's not long ago that it was discovered for the first time that a Portland firm did the architecture. This put an end to stories that Dunsmuir imported European architects. Craigdarroch, as far as I can learn, was almost completely done by American architects, artists and contractors. This was but natural, for in the construction of Craigdarroch, Dunsmuir was vying with his California contemporaries, Leland Stanford, Mark Hopkins, James Flood, Charles Crocker and James Fair, who were at the same time, putting up their mansions atop San Francisco's Nob Hill.

As I did fresh research, in an effort to place the exact location of the Castle's lodge, I came across bits and pieces of the Dunsmuir story that I had not known before.

There Was a Brawl

ROBERT DUNSMUIR died in 1899, just as his castle was about complete. I found that four years before his death he was engaged in a street corner altercation that had the entire town buzzing.

The Colonist reported: "As Mr. Robert Dunsmuir and ex-mayor Roderick Finlayson were conversing in front of the Bank of British Columbia they were approached by Mr. A. De Cosmos, who applied opprobrious epithets to Mr. Dunsmuir, who requested his insult, who seemed to be laboring under some strong excitement, to pass on, whereupon Mr. De Cosmos struck him on the side of the head with his fist. Mr. Dunsmuir retaliated by wearing out an umbrella on his assailant's head and shoulders."

At this moment, who should come along but the mayor himself, R. P. Ritchie, and De Cosmos left Dunsmuir and turned his stormy attentions to His Worship, who argued. But then, "the mayor's patience being finally exhausted he varied the monotony and proceeded to chastise his assailant, who thereupon dodged behind a post and finally retreated into his office. He was subsequently taken home in a cab."

What a peccadillo that was—four of the town's most prominent citizens engaged in a brawl in the public gaze—names, indeed, to conjure with in our history—De Cosmos, Dunsmuir, Finlayson, Ritchie.

In 1908 I find a note in The Colonist about the Castle: "A fine sample of British Columbia fir timber attracted attention at the E. and N. Railway yards . . . where it was being fashioned into a flagpole for the Craigdarroch grounds. The stick measures 136 feet in length and about 26 inches at the butt, and took five cars to bring it down from Oyster Bay."

Hughes Had Hopes

MRS. DUNSMUIR DIED in her Castle in 1908, and the next few years are cloaked in mystery. The 27 acres were subdivided, and the Castle itself seems to have had a number of owners. Several important citizens took options on the place.

I was surprised when I found this, in 1909:

"Craigdarroch . . . was sold . . . to Griffith R. Hughes, chartered accountant of this city." (Mr. Hughes was chief accountant for the David Spencer department store, and later, for a time, owned The Victoria Times.)

That account gave a brief description of the Castle: "Built of Haddington Island stone, the balconies supported by pillars of hardwood throughout, and contains 30 rooms."

Hughes' plans, however, fell through.

Souvenir Programmes

In Mrs. Young's possessions are two elaborate souvenir programmes for dances given at Craigdarroch Castle in 1907 and 1908. Yet there's not a word in the newspapers about what must have been the high society events of the era.

Perhaps it was because at the time Mrs. Dunsmuir was engaged in controversy with the city about her taxes. Though she was a wealthy woman, she watched her dollars, and evidently believed that just because she was rich she should not be, in her view, robbed. It may have been because of this controversy that she put her foot down, and said that if her daughters gave large parties there was to be no mention of them in the newspapers. Mrs. Dunsmuir, I would say, ruled her family with a rod of iron and was shrewd enough to know that if the local citizens read of costly parties at Craigdarroch, and, at the same time about her fight to cut her taxes, they would become irritated. That's the only reason I can think of to explain no mention of dances at Craigdarroch.

But the rumpus about the Craigdarroch taxes was in newspapers. I learned, too, the cost of Craigdarroch—$185,000, exclusive of the fences and gates. Many people insist Craigdar-rock cost $1,000,000. Now that story has been broken down.

The TAX CASE went before Mr. Justice G. A. Walker, who, The Colonist reported, "found from information that he had obtained, that the structure had cost $185,000; and in view of this fact he had considered that a valuation for assessment purposes at $80,000 would be a fair valuation. But the valuation on the basis of the cost of a structure, he said, is not that... the actual cash value of the appellant's improvements, as they would be appraised in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor"—would be $45,000.

"In these improvements are included the dwelling house, the stables, the lodge, and front and other walls on the grounds. Justice Walker said: 'I must therefore direct the assessment of $80,000 on improvements to be reduced to the sum of $45,000.'"

True enough, as Mrs. Dunsmuir suspected, this irritated most people in the city. The Victoria Times chided: "There is good reason to believe that the cutting in half of this assessment is viewed by the great majority of citizens with alarm and dissatisfaction."

"So sweeping a reduction as $35,000 off an assessment of $80,000 is sufficiently startling to call for close and impartial examination, especially as the principle involved is the most vital in social legal and governmental ethics."

"... a double injustice has apparently been done to the other ratepayers; the property was not properly assessed, because not highly enough assessed in the first place; and in the second place the much too low assessment has been cut down in the most radical and unaccountable fashion."

"It is the rule that large and expensive buildings are assessed much lower proportionately than cheap ones, owing to the supposed difficulty the owners would have in realizing upon their investment if the property were placed on the market."

And so it was that Craigdarroch was never the happy place Robert Dunsmuir intended it to be. It was constantly embroiled in legal fights of one kind or another. Mrs. Dunsmuir's happiest days, obviously, had been spent at Nanaimo; riches seems to have brought her little but a desire to increase her fortune.

When she died The Colonist said of her: "Mrs. Dunsmuir was a welcome visitor in every home in Nanaimo, where there was need of a clear brain, willing hands and a heart full of sympathy."

"Wealth did not come early to her husband and she knew what it meant to toil early and late for the 10 children who were born to her."

"There was no rose-strewn pathway but as she trod it she was always sustained by the consciousness that she was doing her best under the circumstances in which Providence had placed her, and that best was very well done indeed."

Some day all the bits and pieces about Craigdarroch will be sewn together in the complete story. In the meantime new items will always be cropping up.

£150, saw the tax reduced from sevenpence to sixpence in the pound; over £150, the reduction was from tenpence to ninepence in the pound. More like ten shillings in the pound in recent years!

In 1861 the population of London was 2,803,034 which made it the largest city in the world. Next came Paris with about 2,400,000. Today it's Tokyo that can claim this rather dubious honor.

There were already 10,000 miles of railway lines in Great Britain. A type-setting machine was invented in 1862, but the linotype didn't come for years later. The post office was using pneumatic tubes for carrying mail bags, but the company who built the system failed in 1876. In 1860 "refreshment houses" for the sale of wine and other beverages were licensed.

Sports Highlights

Lacrosse became suddenly popular in England and the United States, and so did velodromes. Clubs were formed and long distance races organized. The "Sporting Gazette" was first published this year, and Deerfoot, a Seneca Indian, ran twelve miles in sixty-five minutes and five seconds.

The Old Country was growing rapidly in population; there were 712,000 births and 436,000 deaths in 1862. There were 1,204 inquests on suicides in England and Wales, and in November, 1862, there were 24 convictions for savage personal outrages. The gentle game of mugging is apparently not new. This same year there were 221 murders in England and Wales, without counting those who got away with it undetected.

Meanwhile England imported $6,500,000 pounds of tea and 2,000,000 pounds of snuff. The London General Cab Company was busy with 6,000 vehicles on the streets, and a company to make carpets out of cork, the forerunner of linoleum, was formed. Blather and Coombe went up in a balloon to a height of seven miles, a record then.

The Baroness Burdett Coutts, who presented Victoria with St. John's Church, the "old iron church," consecrated in 1860, which stood where the Hudson's Bay store is now, gave another church to Port Churchill, Manitoba, and also erected a fountain in Victoria Park, London. The second great International Exhibition was held in a building specially erected for it and over 6,000,000 people attended. A new bridge across the Thames, 1,225 feet long, was opened at Westminster.

Theatrical World

Blondin, the French rope-walker, who gave his first show at the age of five, played the violin, cooked a meal, and pretended to fall off his rope in the Crystal Palace. Covent Garden Theatre was playing Italian and English opera and "Colleen Bawn" established some sort of a record by running over 300 nights at the Adelphi.

The Vegetarian Society held its 15th annual meeting, and there was an International Conference on vivisection also in the Crystal Palace.

The Irish and Italians got into a riot in Hyde Park and public meetings there were temporarily forbidden. The Mormons, now firmly established in Utah, were sending missionaries to England and France. In some rural districts people still believed in witchcraft and an elderly paralyzed Frenchman who was thought to be a wizard was ducked and drowned.

Beginning in 1862, all candidates for the Civil Service were required to pass examinations, which was felt to be grandly unfair. It now became possible to protect photographs by copyright. There was no parcel post department in the Post Office till 1863.

Trumpan was the Poet Laureate. In his later years he sported a magnificent white beard. Beards had been increasing in popularity since 1854 and were now either luxuriant or bristling.

People were still talking about Christmas Day, 1860, when it was 17 below zero in Hyde Park. Horseradish had six-inch icicles hanging from their nostrils, men's beards were frozen stiff, and tens of thousands of trees had their roots frozen, for the frost penetrated deep into the ground. The cold snap lasted three days.

A couple of years later, 1864, my father was born, an event the significance of which I did not fully appreciate at the time.

When Professor F. G. C. Wood Spoke to an Audience In Vancouver Recently, He Sent That City's

At this anniversary time, when the changes brought by lapse of years are under review, one of the most noteworthy is seen in the fact that a native son of Victoria is asked to talk about his birthplace in the city of Vancouver.

The reason why this request marks a change of feeling is apparent to all who can rightly call themselves "old" residents of either city. In the period that these brief reminiscences are going to cover—the period around the turn of the century—there was a deadly rivalry between the two largest towns of B.C. Victoria had a population of approximately 21,000 and Vancouver 29,000. Many people in the former city thought it was still possible to keep up with the phenomenal growth of the upstart community at the end of the comparatively new CPR. On the other hand, Victoria had the Parliament Buildings and—a possession of much greater value—an air of gracious maturity, both somewhat envied by the youthful mainland town.

The intervening years have made clear the part that each city is to play in the stirring life of Western Canada, and old animosities are dead. So, on this hundredth anniversary Vancouver joins with the rest of the province in extending congratulations and best wishes to her good neighbor just 80 miles away.

And what a different place geographically was that Victoria of 1900 as contrasted with the city of double that population at the present day! There was, for example, no Fairfield district. Street cars had not been extended along Cook Street and out to Foul Bay. Between Fairfield Road and the sea stretched fertile market gardens, with the odd house along the fringe.

The present large and popular Oak Bay residential district was not in existence, homes being confined largely to Oak Bay Avenue and the road along the sea which then bore the name, Mt. Baker Avenue.

At the Willows where the carline ended, there was little more than the old Exhibition buildings, and the Uplands district and golf course were rolling fields with blue and yellow flowers growing in profusion under the oaks in the spring. In fact, so remote were both Foul Bay and Cadboro Bay that various old families had their summer residences there, in the peace of the countryside. At the north end of town there were not many houses beyond Hillside Avenue, and with the exception of a line of fine homes along the Gorge Road, that now populous district was well wooded.

The business section, too, was much more confined than it is now. Those were the days when Government Street reigned supreme, and from Johnson Street at one end to the old James Bay Bridge at the other were located most of the large shops. Con-first, you know. Paint won't stay on fiberglass without it."

For the record it must be said I had enough faking courage to wriggle under the Kona again where I poked at its bottom with anxious fingers. The new paint seemed to have glued itself on well enough but for several days after that I didn't return to the scene. Instead I managed to think there were other things about the move to the Island that needed more attention.

In the end, however, the questioning looks of my wife broke through this pretense. Was there anything else that needed to be done on the boat? Would it be ready in time? Finally I went back to my problem and so to the drama of the cracked canvas.

During the winter, cracks had appeared in the canvas covering the cabin which I realized needed fixing but I didn't see how they had much to do with going to Vancouver Island. However, as my wife thought all repairs should be done while we were at it, I gingerly poked a knife into the cracks, hoping I could take off a neat little patch around the area which we could then replace and paint over.

But perhaps you boat owners have found that cracked canvas is not something to play around with. The cracks on my boat were actually innocent-looking symptoms of fairly massive decay. Instead of removing three or four square inches of canvas, I took off at least three square feet before, feeling weak and frightened, I called a halt to the desecration.

The situation was alarming, for the exposed part was not only large and ugly but also irregular. I could see through aging eyes it would be hopeless to design a patch to fit it.

And so there came into my mind a concoction which I urged boat owners at all costs to avoid. My adviser this time was a marine hardware salesman who listened knowingly to my problem and then recommended a substance which could be applied smoothly over the exposed plywood.

"Just apply it quickly," he cautioned. "It hardens fast." And that was the great understatement of all marine history.

When I opened the can I saw a thick, gummy material that seemed to be hardening right before my eyes. Obviously the most desperate and speedy action was needed and I lathered it on without much regard for the limits of the area, innocently hoping I could later trim it down.

But I had an iron monstrosity on my hands. It reminded me of a movie I had seen in which a monster from outer space procreated at a fantastic rate by putting the seeds of his species into soil where they immediately started to grow into little monsters. This stuff took on horrible form and dimension even as I looked at it. Great nodules appeared which, faster than I could press them back, attained the quality of rock. It was terrible, calamitous, appalling!

More days of inertia followed. The idea of taking out that mistreated little boat with large warts on it and paint streaming from its bottom was more than I could contemplate.

The last act was still to be played out, however. The sea has no place for weaklings and so, equipped with renewed nerve and a strong file, I again visited the Kona and did manage to rehabilitate the disaster area to some extent. But it was then that my wife raised a disturbing question about the deck. Scoured by the elements, the once lustrous varnish had become drab and flaky and the wood underneath looked spotty. In short, this needed fixing, too.

Now a varnishing job sounds simple enough. You slap on a new coat and theoretically that wonderful gloss has returned.

Not so with our boat. The new coat of varnish sank out of sight without a struggle. So I tried a dark stain that looked as if it would hide anything and once more felt the familiar rising panic. Instead of concealing spots, the stain, with a kind of mischievous reverse action, accentuated them; and now I had a deck that resembled a testing ground for seasickness.

What keeps a boat-owner going at a point like this is hard to say. Somewhere along the line I think he starts to fancy his craft as a living thing which appreciates his acts of kindness and is tormented by his mistakes. At any rate, I know that in my heart some feeling of this sort was taking shape. The stage was reached where the trip to Vancouver Island took second place and the Kona emerged as a yearning, devoted creature needing attention in its own right.

With quivering but resolving spirit I decided an entirely new look must be created which would rid our boat of its suffering. That meant paint.

With the tenderness of expectant parents planning the decor of a nursery, my wife and I chose for the deck a nice light blue which we thought would be gay without being busy, bright without being garish. But first something had to be done about a number of weathery little splits in the wood, for I was determined to overlook no detail this time. Only a smooth professional job would do.

Another salesman in another hardware store recommended a filler he said was easy to apply and took 24 hours to harden, which presumably allowed lots of time to correct mistakes.

The filler was everything he promised, only more so. It ran like milk. Starting carefully on the first few cracks, I suddenly found my new material seeking its own level in a dozen directions not on the program. Frantically I tried to contain the stuff but it slurped, bubbled and splashed, and another kind of monster was with me.

Of course, all scenes of boat repairs have their jokers and the one I encountered turned out to be the same young man who had given me his weighty knowledge about doing the bottom of a fiberglass boat. Gazing at the frothy white display on my deck, he said, "What did you do? Spill beer on it?" (It would mortify me if he knew but ironically a few minutes before I did have a bottle of beer up there and I did spill it on the deck. May he drop dead!)

I said the episode of the deck was the last act in my comedy of boat repairs but there was a final scene which must be related if this baring of a troubled soul is to be complete. It concerned that light blue paint we bought. After I had overcome the filler problem to some extent, my wife and I tried a few preliminary dabs. Too pale! With the same tenderness as before we mixed in a darker blue until we had a color we thought was just right.

It was just right, too, but that night it rained. Next day the situation didn't look too serious at first. Some spots needed touching up here and there, and with a carefree heart I started on them. But before I could finish our carefully chosen mixture ran out.

We never did find that color again. After two more coats we settled on a bluish-green shade that we both admitted looked slightly sick. But weariness against doing more had finally taken hold.

Well, that about wraps it up, except for one thing—the boat is still in Vancouver. Returning from a trial run before the big trip, I misjudged the height of an overhead ramp and bashed it the windshield. Now settled in Duncan, we have been over twice to look at it and twice have returned with nothing done.

The Mystery Still Unsolved . . . WHO KILLED HAMMARSKJOLD?

THE MYSTERIOUS DEATH OF DAG HAMMARSKJOLD by Arthur
I. Gavshon; George J. McLeod;
$3.75.

Reviewed by AARON EINFRAK

One year ago Dag Hammarskjold met his death in a plane crash in an African jungle.

Arthur Gavshon does not reveal any new facts, but does admirably describe the setting of the secretary-general's last sacrifice as well as the findings of the various investigations. And at times Mr. Gavshon's excellent book displays startling flashes of insight into the mystery of Hammar-skjold's death, in much the same way that lightning flits across an African sky, delineating for a brief moment the horror of the jungle.

Mr. Gavshon begins by giving an excellent background picture to the Hammar-skjold tragedy: The East-West struggle over the Congo; the UN's attempts to avoid war, the conflict between the UN and secessionist Katanga, the reasons behind Mr. Hammar-skjold's ill-fated flight to work out a cease-fire with Katangese Premier Tshombe whose white-led gendarmes were locked in battle with the UN forces.

When Hammar-skjold left Leopold-ville for Ndola, he was in a curious position.

He was under orders by the UN to bring peace to a unified Congo, but only way of doing it was to resort to the sword and turn the UN into a war-making instead of a peace-keeping organization. As Gavshon so spitily points out, Mr. Hammar-skjold was "convinced that the United Nations must not win the battle of Katanga—yet dared not lose it."

Also contributing to the Ham-mar-skjold dilemma was the fact the Soviets were openly waging a propaganda war against every move the secretary-general made. On the other hand, certain Western governments, notably Britain, did everything in their power to sabotage the UN effort while loudly mouthing trite statements about loyalty to the UN.

Dying Crasp

With both East and West against him, Mr. Hammar-skjold's situation was so desperate that he apparently grasped at any chance to bring peace in Katanga, even to the point of ignominiously making a dangerous night flight in a bullet-damaged plane through skies controlled by Katangese jets, to meet the UN's arch enemy and betrayer, Tshombe.

Mr. Gavshon implies that Ham-mar-skjold's death may have been the kindest reward for the secretary-general, who apparently had no way to solve the situation but to die. And his death did dramatize to the world the ugly game that was being played in Katanga at the expense of the UN.

What stands out in this book is the blame that Britain must share—albeit in Platteau-like fashion for Hammar-skjold's death.

British Threat

Mr. Gavshon superbly describes how the British threatened to withdraw their indispensable support from the UN Congo operation unless Hammar-skjold halted the Katanga fighting, how the British prevented jets from reaching the UN Katanga base even though UN troops were being murdered by Katanga jets, how the British co-operated with white racist leader Sir Roy Welensky in Rhodesia, who gave every assistance to Tshombe against the UN; and how heavy British investments in Katanga apparently caused the Macmillan government to wage a no-holds-barred diplomatic war against the UN.

However, even the UN women in for criticism in Mr. Gavshon's book.

For instance, he notes with some amusement that the UN's September, 1961, military campaign against Tshombe's forces was started without permission of Hammar-skjold.

Hatred

He also mentions the deep hatred the UN personnel in Katanga felt toward the whites who backed Tshombe.

But amid this tangle of conflicting interests and hatreds, Mr. Gavshon's book illustrates that Dag Hammarskjold somewhat miraculously managed to live up to the words on a little card which he carried with him. The card read:

"I, Dag Hammar-skjold, solemnly swear to exercise in all loyalty, discretion and conscience, the functions entrusted to me as Secretary-General of the United Nations, to discharge these functions and regulate my conduct with the interests of the United Nations only in view, and not to seek or accept instructions in regard to the performance of my duties from any government or other authority external to the organization."

only situated at the corner of Fort St. was that place of liquid refreshment, The Brown Jug, where thirst, sudden or habitual,
could be readily quenched.

Of course, there were stores on Douglas Street and on Fort, Yates and Johnson Streets for the two blocks between the main thoroughfares. But on Government Street were the big dry goods stores, for this was an age in which the department store had not reached Victoria. In the one block between Trafalgar Alley and Fort Street was David Spencer's old store running through to Broad Street at the rear. Next door was another dry goods establishment, called the White House, very popular with old residents, and across the street was the third of the really large shops of this kind, the Hut-cheson company's business, known as the Westside.

A substantial red brick building of several stories known as the Five Sisters Block stood at the Fort Street end of this business row. The fire of some ten years later was to wipe out most of these buildings, and it was then that the Spencer Co. moved to the present Eaton's location. To do so, they took over the old Victoria theatre, with its red plush interior, at the corner of View and Douglas Streets, and the adjoining Druid Hotel, whose lobby, dotted with potted palms, was a landmark for many distinguished travellers. To alter even further the character of this old section, View Street, which formerly came to a dead end at Broad Street, was

The James Bay Bridge which connected Government Street with the other side of the narrow section of the harbor was not without its picturesque qualities. But, when the tide was low, it spanned one of the most ill-smelling mudflats that ever offended the nose of man. Those who only know this area as the location of one of the world's most stately hotels can never visualize that section as it was before the Empress and the Cassiarway were built.

I have said that Government Street ended at the bridge. This is true, for the thoroughfare on the James Bay side running along the grounds of the Parliament Buildings, was called Birdcage Walk, after a street in a similar section of old London itself. It seems a pity that this delightful appellation was dropped at a time when a progressive city council decided to abolish a lot of names that, in the maker of the Old Country, designated the jugged parts of what was really one long street.

Some of these changes were not effected without a struggle. When Birdcage Walk was merged with Government Street, and an ambitious aldermanic board wanted to push this main thoroughfare through to the sea at Dallas Road, it found an old, ivy-clad house blocking the way, as it sat on Michigan Street looking towards the town. For many years it had been the home of the Cameron family, and Miss Agnes Deane Cameron, one of Victoria's most able native daughters, was determined that no one would touch the place so long as her aged mother lived. As Miss Cameron had a neat wit, her prolonged tilt with the authorities gave Victoria much amusement at the expense of their council.

In the first year of the new century, Government House, always such an important feature in the social life of the capital city, was presided over by Sir Henri Joly de Lothier, that gracious Frenchman with the charm of the old world, who left many fond memories behind him. At the moment, however, he was not living in that old furnished residence, called Grey Castle, for it had burned down one windy night. He was residing in a temporary but spacious abode on Moss Street in the house still standing that afterwards became the home of the family of the late David Spencer. The premier of the province later himself to serve as Lieutenant Governor, was the Hon. James Dunsmuir, whose home was at Burling, on Craigflower Road, with the grounds running down to the Gorge shoreline at the rear. The mayor of Victoria at that time was Charles Hayward, who served several terms in that capacity.

Some of the most colorful personalities of the period were to be found among the city clergy. Living in Bishop's Close, a quaint, sprawling house near by the present cathedral, was Bishop William W. Potts, who for many years was assisted in his varied duties by his capable sister. This gratious lady presided over the early days of the Local Council of Women, and that excellent organization for charitable purposes, the Friendly Help Society. In this charitable work she was assisted by prominent citizens of Victoria, such as Miss Maria Lawson, Mrs.
William Grant, and Mrs. R. H. Mc-
Micking. Associated with Bishop
Potts in the affairs of Christ Church, that wooden frame building of many additions, that stood on the eminence the court house now occupies, were Canon Benjamin and Archdeacon Austin Scriven. One can't recall this trio without the feeling that they were surely characters related to those of Anthony Trollope in his tales of cathedral towns in old England. In the two downtown Presbyterian churches were the Rev.
Dr. John Campbell and the Rev.
W. Leslie Clay, two gentlemen who through many years of devoted service left an indelible impression on the life of Victoria.

The pastor in the Metropolitan Methodist Church then was the Rev. Elliott S. Rowe, but at that time the clergy of this denomination moved on to pastures new every three or four years, and so were never really regarded as citizens in a community in which many people had lived half a century.

Life in Victoria at this time was still much colored by the presence of many members of H. M.'s regular forces. At West Point barracks was maintained a garrison of old country men stationed in this outpost of empire, and Esquimaux with its excellent harbor and drydock, was the headquarters of Her Majesty's navy in the Pacific. The striking uniforms of officers and men were familiar sights on the streets, mingling with the well-tailored English towns of the ladies and the plus four of the gentlemen in civilian life. Frequently these officers, many of them younger sons of well known British families, accrued to the charms of Victoria's daughters. At such times, Christ Church became the scene of a fashionable wedding just was much talked about for many days afterwards, as were the lists of guests, that, according to a curious practice of the day, were published at length in The Colonist and Times.

It was on the annual 24th of May holiday that we used used to these imperial forces within our gates. As befitting a community named after Her Most Gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria, the day observed the royal birthday, with three days of celebration. Visitors came from Seattle, Vancouver and up island points, and the whole town was on foot. The first showing was usually given over to a parade, in which detachments of

ERIC SISMEY Relates One of the Indian Legends

Near Oroville, close to the Canadian border, in Okanagan country, an upright boulder, eight to 10 feet high, once stood. It looked not unlike a human body. It was called the Hee-Hee stone. Passing Indians always left gifts at the foot of the stone in the belief that their gift would bring them luck; and in time white men left gifts, too.

Hee-Hee is a Chinook jargon word. It means "laugh" and Okanagan storytellers relate that an Indian maiden, Blue Flower, was turned into the Hee-Hee stone because she laughed at Coyote.

Among the Salish people of the Interior, legends woven around Coyote are numerous. Coyote, a supernatural creature, could change his body at will. He was creator, transformer, sometimes a doer of good deeds and at other times mean and mischievous.

The legend of the Hee-Hee stone that follows was told to me by Chief Baptiste of Incomep, near Oliver, B.C., many years ago, and is one of several variants. This version is familiar to the Indians of the Okanagan on both sides of the line and to those around Colville.

Blue Flower, a beautiful maiden, lived with her father, the chief, at Kalispel. One day she filled a basket with camas bulbs and started westward into Okanagan where she knew a handsome young man named Serakan lived. Blue Flower hoped that Serakan would like her and would ask her to be his bride.

When Blue Flower reached the divide between her country and Okanagan she rested at "Enamtuas" (sitting and waiting on the summit) while she combed and braided her hair and painted her face with red clay.

She had not waited long before she saw the three brothers. They had dreamed that a beautiful maiden was coming and they had set out to meet her. When the young men saw how beautiful she was, each, in turn, asked her to be his wife, but before she could answer the younger brothers began to fight. They were still fighting when Coyote came along. Coyote thought it was funny for two brothers to fight over a girl and when he laughed at them Blue Flower was annoyed. She spoke to him sharply.

This made Coyote angry. "I'll get even with you!" he shouted. "No one may speak to me like that!"

Then Coyote, calling on his magic, turned the lower half of the girl to stone and sent the brothers back to their own country where he transformed them into three mountains.

When Coyote turned to Blue Flower again he saw that she had thrown the camas bulbs back into Kalispel country. She did not want camas to grow for Okanagan people—and to this day not one has ever grown there.

Afterwards Blue Flower sang her own power song and changed the rest of herself to stone.

Coyote was sorry for what he had done to her; but he was powerless to undo her magic, so he said, "You will help the people who are to come! You will be a good luck stone! People will bring you gifts!"

Then Coyote called to the brothers who were now three mountains. To the middle one, he said, "You will remain a sharp peak. Woman will always like you just like this Kalispel girl did."

To the youngest, he said, "Because you were beaten to the ground you will be a low ridge. You will never raise your head."

To the eldest, Coyote said, "Because you did not fight you will always stand with your head and shoulders high. You will be called 'Big Chopaka Mountain' and all the people round about will be able to see you from afar."

"And to this day," Chief Baptiste said, with a wave of his hand in the direction of the peak, "there the three mountains stand just where Coyote transformed them."

MOURNING DOVE

Through the last 75 years students have searched for Coyote tales and one of the most interesting collections was gathered by an Indian woman, Hu-mi-shu-ma (Mourning Dove).

Mourning Dove was born in a canoe, in 1868, while her mother and grandmother were journeying along the Kootenay river near where Bonner's Ferry stands today. Her grandmother was a Nicola woman and through her "Friend Coyote," copy of an original drawing by Francis Baptiste, grandson of Chief Baptiste of Incomep. This drawing was made while Francis was in his early teens. When he was 17 a painting on buckskin, "St. Francis Feeding the Birds," was exhibited in London in 1924.

Friend Coyote illustrates a legend of a human befriending a coyote by removing a bone that was stuck in its throat.

Mourning Dove could trace white blood to her grandfather, a Hudson's Bay man at Fort Colville.

When Mourning Dove was seven years old she entered the convent of the Sacred Heart at Ward, in Stevens county. She was determined to become educated, she would never be satisfied to live out her life on a reserve. After many disappointments and broken attendance at other schools she enrolled in a Calgary business college when she was 24 years old. At the college she was shunned by the white students who could not understand why an Indian girl desired education. With natural dignity she ignored unkind words and snubs. What dismayed her classmates was that Mourning Dove usually headed the class.

After graduating from the Calgary school Mourning Dove accepted a position to teach at the Incomep Indian School at Oliver, B.C., where, on one of her frequent visits to friends on the Washington side, she had the good fortune to meet the historian Lucullus McWhorter. As their friendship grew she told him of her efforts to write. McWhorter advised and encouraged her, he also suggested that she should record the legends of her storytelling grandmother.

Mourning Dove is known to have married Fred Galler around 1920, to have lived at Omak and to have taken the name Christine.

In 1927 she published a novel "Oge-we-a" (The Half Blood) which she dedicated to See-weh-ken chief of the Schuwyipk. The dedication reads in part; "See-weh-ken, . . . Earth's primitive nobleman who, in peace welcomed the coming of the paleface, only to witness the seeds of destruction scattered among his own, once strong and contented, people. . . ."

After the publication of her book, thought to be the first book published by an Indian, Hu-mi-shu-ma was elected an honorary member of the Eastern Washington Historical Society and shortly to a life membership in the Washington State Historical Society.

In 1933 "Coyote Tales," by Mourning Dove, was published by the Caxton Printers in Idaho.

In 1935, Hu-mi-shu-ma was elected to the Council of Colville Tribes—great honor to a woman of any tribe—but she did not wear this honor long for in August 1936, Hu-mi-shu-ma passed suddenly to the Happy Hunting Grounds of her people and the native voice of eastern Washington was hushed forever.

soldiers and sailors marched. When the number of floats and decorated carriages did not seem enough, fire engines and other city possessions, highly polished, were added to swell the show. It was about this time that one city father, more zealous than wise, included at the end of the procession a number of city scavenger carts. The plea that these had just recently been purchased did not quite atone for the effect of anti-climax. The afternoon saw the inevitable game of lacrosse at the old Caledonia Grounds, near Beacon Hill Park. And what battles these were in those days of mighty players!

A sham battle between army and navy on the open spaces of Macaulay Point was often a feature of these celebrations. But it was during the Regatta at the Gorge on the afternoon of May 24 itself, that the most colorful programme was offered. With most of Victoria in boats of one sort or another along the course, these races were followed with great excitement. Not only were the Indian war canoe events both novel and thrilling, but the rhythmic rowing of the navy crews was a pretty spectacle. Entries from such ships as the Warspite, the Phaeton, the Arcturion, the Egeria, and the Sparrowhawk would vie with one another, and each had its keen supporters among the crowd.

Such were some of the pleasant aspects of life in old Victoria. Looking back, one is impressed with the idea that a prevailing characteristic of that life was the existence of standards to which old Victoria rigidly adhered. Certain things were done and others just were not. Then, as now, crude outsiders made jokes about the sleepiness of the place. To them Victoria makes no reply, realizing that for such people the rich leisure, the many interests and the warm friendships found therein could have no appeal.

May the next hundred years be happy ones, and through them all, may Victoria preserve the charm and individuality that are her greatest assets. May she remain not only "a little bit of England on the shores of the Pacific", but also that fascinating spot so many of her widely scattered sons and daughters are still most happy to regard as home.
